society for the film studio when she consents to perform in a series of films thus legitimising acting for what some might have considered a low art. Stories like these were the stuff of newspaper headlines in 1920s and reflected a craze for the cinema. They also demonstrated radical changes in attitudes and values within society in the wake of World War I. Chris O'Rourke investigates the myths and material practices that grew up around film actors during the silent era. The book sheds light on issues such as the social and cultural reception of cinema, the participatory film culture expressed through fan magazines, instructional booklets and movie star competitions, and the working conditions encountered by actors behind the scenes of silent films. Drawing on extensive research and a wealth of archival materials, O'Rourke examines how dreams of stardom were fuelled and exploited in the interwar period and reconstructs the personal narratives and experiences of the first generation to imagine making a living on screen. In doing so, he reveals a missing and much sought after piece of cinematic history to bring to life the developing industries, social attitudes and norms of a period of enormous change. The Classical Hollywood Reader Stephen Neale, 2012. First Published in 2012. Routledge is an imprint of Taylor & Francis, an information company.

Movie Acting, the Film Reader Pamela Robertson Wojcik, 2004. Combining classic and recent essays and examining key issues such as Movie Acting, the Film Reader explores one of the most central but often overlooked aspects of cinema: film acting.

Making Believe Lisa Bode, 2017-07-07. In the past twenty years we have seen the rise of digital effects cinema in which the human performer is entangled with animation, collaged with other performers or inserted into perilous or fantastic situations and scenery. Making Believe sheds new light on these developments by historicizing screen performance within the context of visual and special effects cinema and technological change in Hollywood filmmaking through the silent, early sound and current digital eras. Making Believe incorporates North American film reviews and editorials, actor and crew interviews, trade and fan magazine commentary, actor training manuals and film production publicity materials to discuss the shifts in screen acting practice and philosophy around transfiguring, makeup, doubles, motion capture and acting to absent places or characters. Along the way it considers how performers and visual and special effects crew work together and struggle with the industry critics and each other to define the aesthetic value of their work in an industrial system of technological reproduction. Bode opens our eyes to the performing illusions we love and the tensions we experience in wanting to believe in spite of our knowledge that it is all make believe in the end. Stardom Christine Gledhill, 2003-09-02. In the past stars have been studied as cogs in a mass entertainment industry selling desires and ideologies. But since the 1970s new approaches have reopened debate as film and cultural studies try to account for the active role of the star in producing meanings, pleasures and identities for a diversity of audiences. Stardom brings together for the first time some of the major writing of the last decade which seeks to understand the phenomenon of stars and stardom. Gathered under four headings: The System, Stars and Society, Performers and Signs, Desire and Politics, these essays represent a range of approaches drawn from film history, sociology, textual analysis, audience research, psychoanalysis and cultural politics. They raise important issues about the politics of representation and the cultural limitations and possibilities of stars Picture Personalities Richard DeCordova, 2001 Moving pictures existed for over a decade before anything resembling a star system appeared Then American cinema went from being devoid of stars to being dependent on them This is an account of this development in cinema and modern culture The Dramatic Index for ... Frederick Winthrop Faxon, Mary Estella Bates, Anne C.
