transformed into an expression of awe and joy by Gabriel Zaid Arguing that books are the essential part of the great conversation we call culture and civilization So Many Books reminds us that reading and by extension writing and publishing is a business a vanity a vocation an avocation a moral and political act a hedonistic pursuit all of the aforementioned none of the aforementioned and is often a miracle Doug Dutton Zaid traces the preoccupation with reading back through Dr Johnson Seneca and even the Bible Of making many books there is no end He emerges as a playful celebrant of literary proliferation noting that there is a new book published every thirty seconds and optimistically points out that publishers who moan about low sales see as a failure what is actually a blessing The book business unlike newspapers films or television is viable on a small scale Zaid who claims to own more than ten thousand books says he has sometimes thought that a chastity glove for authors who can't contain themselves would be a good idea Nonetheless he cheerfully opines that the truly cultured are capable of owning thousands of unread books without losing their composure or their desire for more New Yorker
