and hunting patrols around the coasts of Britain and escorted merchant convoys to safety Despite the fact that aircraft acting alone destroyed only one U boat during the war the overall contribution of naval aviation to foiling U boat attacks was significant Only five merchant vessels succumbed to submarine attack when convoyed by a combined air and surface escort during World War I This book examines aircraft and weapons technology aircrew training and the aircraft production issues that shaped this campaign Then a close examination of anti submarine operations bombing patrols and escort yields a significantly different judgment from existing interpretations of these operations This study is the first to take an objective look at the writing and publication of the naval and air official histories as they told the story of naval aviation during the Great War The author also examines the German view of aircraft effectiveness through German actions prisoner interrogations official histories and memoirs to provide a comparative judgment The conclusion closes with a brief narrative of post war air anti submarine developments and a summary of findings Overall the author concludes that despite the challenges of organization training and production the employment of aircraft against U boats was largely successful during the Great War This book will be of interest to historians of naval and air power history as well as students of World War I and military history in general Aircraft & Aerospace Asia-Pacific ,2005 Victory Roll: William Wolf,2002-01-08 He was selected from the cream of American youth with admission standards much more restrictive than any other branch of the military Well trained pilots flying superior new fighter aircraft against an enemy losing its best pilots and unable to afford the luxury of extended training brought about the inevitable defeat of the Axis air forces This is their story Cross & Cockade Journal ,1968 Parliamentary Debates (Hansard) Great Britain. the impetus of a feral aerial conflict into an operational force that effectively challenged and finally helped bring about the Luftwaffe's comprehensive demise

The RAF in the Battle of France and the Battle of Britain

Greg Baughen, 2017-09-15 In May 1940 the opposing German and Allied forces seemed reasonably well matched. On the ground the four allied nations had more troops, artillery and tanks. Even in the air the German advantage in numbers was slight. Yet two months later the Allied armies had been crushed. The Netherlands, Belgium and France had all surrendered and Britain stood on her own facing imminent defeat. Subsequent accounts of the campaign have tended to see this outcome as predetermined, with the seeds of defeat sown long before the fighting began. Was it so inevitable? Should the RAF have done more to help the Allied armies? Why was such a small proportion of the RAF's frontline strength committed to the crucial battle on the ground? Could Fighter Command have done more to protect the British and French troops being evacuated from the beaches of Dunkirk? This study looks at the operations flown and takes a fresh look at the fatal decisions made behind the scenes, decisions that unnecessarily condemned RAF aircrews to an unequal struggle and ultimately ensured Allied defeat. What followed became the RAF's finest hour, with victory achieved by the narrowest of margins. Or was it, as some now suggest, a victory that was always inevitable? If so, how was the German military juggernaut that had conquered most of Europe so suddenly halted? This study looks at the decisions and mistakes made by both sides. It explains how the British obsession with bomber attacks on cities had led to the development of the wrong type of fighter force and how only a fortuitous sequence of events enabled Fighter Command to prevail. It also looks at how ready the RAF was to deal with an invasion. How much air support could the British Army have expected? Why were hundreds of American combat planes and experienced Polish and Czech pilots left on the sidelines? And when the Blitz began and Britain finally got the war, it was expecting what? Did this campaign tell us about the theories on air power that had so dominated pre-war air policy? All these questions and more are answered in Greg Baughen's third book. Baughen describes the furious battles between the RAF and the Luftwaffe and the equally bitter struggle between the Air Ministry and the War Office and explains how close Britain really came to defeat in the summer of 1940.

RAF On the Offensive

Greg Baughen, 2018-09-30 Long before the start of the Second World War it had been believed that strategic bombing would be the deciding factor in any future conflict. Then Hitler launched the Blitzkrieg upon France and the Low Countries in 1940 and the much vaunted French Army and the British Expeditionary Force were swept away in just six weeks. This new form of warfare shook the Air Ministry but the expected invasion never came and the Battle of Britain was fought in the air. It seemed that air forces operating independently could determine the course of the war. An Army scarcely seemed necessary for the defence of the UK and no British army could ever be powerful enough to mount an invasion of Europe on its own. Bombing Germany into defeat seemed Britain's only option. In North Africa, however, Commonwealth armies and air forces were demonstrating that they too could use blitzkrieg tactics to crush opponents. Britain was also no longer alone. Greece and then the Soviet Union joined the fight RAF on the Offensive describes how British air power developed after the Battle of Britain Attitudes were beginning to change the fighter rather than the bomber was re emerging as the principal means of gaining air superiority As 1941 drew to a close the strategic air offensive appeared to be achieving little and conventional land warfare seemed poised to replace it as the way to defeat the enemy Which direction then would the war take The Royal Air Force at Home Ian Watson, 2010-06-19 Military public relations endeavors ultimately seek to build a sense of common interests and aims and so generally foster good relations with the people they defend and there in ensure a stable society The armed forces when engaging on any public relations exercise have traditionally sought to provide an entertaining spectacle For years this has been typified by parades bands mock battles drill displays and other relevant feats of military prowess which have captured the imagination of the public and inspired potential recruits The 20th Century brought a new dimension to the field of warfare and subsequently added a new strand to the fabric of public ceremony and displays by the armed forces That new dimension was the arrival of powered flight Display flying began within five years of the Wright Brothers making their milestone first flight The first events staged in Britain which centered on demonstrations by flying machines were organized by the town councils of Blackpool and Doncaster and were held within days of each other in October 1909 1920 was the year that the first of the famed and legendary Hendon Air Pageants was staged and this is where military air shows traditionally began The Hendon Displays were organized and staged by the still fledgling Royal Air Force and it was probably due in no small part to the prestige and spectacle of this fresh new dimension of military pageantry together with other like events held at RAF airfields through the next two decades that the very existence of the RAF was saved from the threat of abolition The history of the RAF s commitment one that compares almost uniquely with other air forces toward display flying through the years after World War II has now come of age This account of their record in this often overlooked but then again traditional field of military customs describes and illustrates the major public RAF events since 1920
