

BRITISH LITERATURE SINCE 1700: BRITAIN AND THE WORLD

Course Description

This course uses the theme "Britain and the World" to survey British literature written since 1700. It gives students a broad as well as deep overview of this literary tradition, focusing on the way that the shifting place of Britain in the world was registered in poetry, fiction, and drama of the eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, and early twenty-first centuries. Through this literature, we see writers repeatedly asking questions about the relationship between individuals and nations: What does it mean to be an ethical world citizen? How are we, or how should we be connected with other people in other parts of the world? These questions animate British literature of the past, and they continue to be relevant to us today. Through our study of British literature, we will train ourselves to think critically across historical and cultural distance, gaining new perspectives on what it means to live in the world.

To these ends, we look at works with international settings, like Bram Stoker's Dracula and Caryl Churchill's Cloud Nine, as well as texts that register the implications for the home front of events that take place abroad, like Muriel Spark's The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein. We take up works that depict leisure travel, like E. M. Forster's Howards End, as well as conflicts between British imperialists and native groups, like Daniel Defoe's Robinson Crusoe. We look at changing understandings of the nature of and significance race, in Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "The Runaway Slave at Pilgrim's Point" and Zadie Smith's On Beauty. We talk about the ways that wars are registered in literature through texts like Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade" and Jane Austen's Persuasion. We discuss the way that international networks of trade are represented in literature, as well as the way that literature itself was a commodity traded internationally, using Charles Dickens's Hard Times as our case study.

Our readings will be framed by frequent informal writing assignments, whether on blog posts or in class, as well as oral discussions and debates that ask students to develop their communication skills through the encounter with British literature from the past. Three formal writing assignments will be the primary way that students are evaluated, and students will be required to participate in small-group workshops to which they will submit paper drafts one week in advance of the due date.

Learning Goals:

- 1) To encounter the wide variety and great diversity of texts produced in Britain since 1700, looking at drama, fiction, and poetry, and also works by writers of differing genders, races, and social classes
- 2) To use literature to think critically across historical and cultural distance, finding similarities and differences between the British past and our American present
- 3) To explore the way that texts speak to the political and social issues of their time by looking at contextual material from newspapers, magazines, and other historical documents
- 4) To explore the way that texts respond to each other
- 5) To develop students' analytical reading, writing, and speaking skills through in-class discussions, blog posts, oral debates, pre-writing exercises, and formal writing assignments
