Course Description

This course explores and reinforces theoretical concepts and clinical application of nursing care of infants, children, and adolescents, in varied health care settings. Synthesis of pathophysiologic, pharmacologic, and therapeutic concepts is incorporated throughout theory and clinical. Family-centered care of children is focal in the synthesis of developmental, cultural, ethnic, religious, and social structures in the pediatric population.

Course Objectives

At the end of this course the student will:

1. Integrate concepts from natural and behavioral sciences, pathophysiology, and humanities in application to the assessment and care of children and their families.
2. Analyze and apply the family-centered atraumatic approach to children and their families, with a focus on cultural, religious, social, developmental and ethnic influences.
3. Identify major developmental stages and associated health promotion issues and problems for each age group
4. Interpret influences on the developing child as a member of a family, a culture, a community and a society.
5. Understand hereditary, genetic, societal, and environmental issues impacting health promotion and risk reduction in pediatric populations.
