Computers in Materials Technology presents the computer applications in materials technology It discusses the materials selection in computer data banks of metals and polymers This book is divided into six sections that address the alloy and composite materials design This book deals first with the computerized control of alloy steel making and heat treatment computer based models for quenching calculation of carbon and nitrogen profile in carburizing and carbonitriding digital image analysis in quantitative metallography and derivation of stereological relationships by computer synthesis of microstructure Other sections consider the computer operated methods of calculating phase equilibria and the computer aided modelling of volume fraction determination These topics are followed by discussions of computer controlled system for constant amplitude fatigue testing and the calculation of the transformation behavior of steel The final chapter looks into the necessity of computer computation in the fiber composites application The book can provide useful information to engineers scientists students and researchers Advanced Materials & Processes ,1995 Metallurgy Prof. Dr. Bilal Semih

Metallography James L. McCall, James H. Steele, 1984 An improved procedure based on the intercept method of measuring the grain size of single phase microstructures has been developed that provides a quantitative description of the grain size yet is fast The procedure combines the statistical advantage of using large numbers with the advantage of interpreting the data as a normal distribution as verified by the chi square test Application of the procedure to ferritic microstructures representative of best and worst case conditions indicates that accuracies on the order of 3 percent at a 95 percent confidence level can be achieved In addition the procedure is sensitive enough to distinguish a randomly mixed duplex grain structure The measurements associated with a two phase microstructure can be more precisely quantified through determination of volume fractions using a Pp measurement based on the use of an appropriate grid network the coefficient of variation statistic and the Poisson distribution The analysis is demonstrated for an a priori system for which the percent accuracy and confidence level can be specified for the volume fraction measurement simply from calculation of the average value for Pp The education and training of the engineer South Africa.
