Capacity for Senior Adult Ministry in Smaller Church Congregations ,2013 This thesis focuses on senior adult ministry expansion in small church congregation setting Research suggests that with an expected increase of older adults in society churches will also need to examine how they meet senior s physical spiritual and social needs Senior adult ministry benefits both seniors and their families but also faces barriers These barriers may include time and talent constraints funding limitations and inadequate training for church leadership Smaller church congregations may be especially vulnerable to these barriers by nature of their size This research examined attitudes toward senior adult ministry in a church with an average weekly attendance of fewer than 200 congregants Through use of surveys and a focus group the researcher found that attitudes toward senior adult ministry were positive and the church congregation supports possible expansion of these ministries Based on these findings the researcher recommends that the church take steps to integrate these findings into meaningful ministry expansion Future research in this area might include replicating the study in similar church congregations to determine if comparable outcomes are found and if these churches can collaborate in senior ministry expansion efforts leaf 4
