Soviet Interwar Economy M. Ilic, 1998-12-21 This book examines changes in official Soviet policy towards the labour protection of women workers 1917-41 Important legislative enactments are analysed In the 1920s emphasis was placed on the protection of female labour by the agencies responsible for regulating women's role in industrial production With the mass recruitment of women workers to the Soviet industrialisation drive by the early 1930s labour protection issues were often ignored as women were encouraged to play a more equal role in the production process Russia's Factory Children

Boris B. Gorshkov, 2009-10-30 At the height of the Russian industrial revolution legions of children toiled in factories accounting for fifteen percent of the workforce Yet by the end of the nineteenth century their numbers had been greatly reduced thanks to legislation that sought to protect the welfare of children for the first time Russia's Factory Children presents the first English language account of the changing role of children in the Russian workforce from the onset of industrialization until the Communist Revolution of 1917 and profiles the laws that would establish children's labor rights In this compelling study Boris B Gorshkov examines the daily lives working conditions hours wages physical risks and health dangers to children who labored in Russian factories He also chronicles the evolving cultural mores that initially welcomed child labor practices but later shunned them Through extensive archival research Gorshkov views the evolution of Russian child labor law as a reaction to the rise of industrialism and the increasing dangers of the workplace Perhaps most remarkable is his revelation that activism from the bourgeoisie intellectuals and children themselves led to the conciliation of legislators and marked a progressive shift that would impact Russian society in the early twentieth century and beyond
