Motivation of Behavior Paul Thomas Young, 1948 Intrinsic Motivation and Self-Determination in Human Behavior Edward L. Deci, Richard M. Ryan, 2013-06-29 Early in this century most empirically oriented psychologists believed that all motivation was based in the physiology of a set of non nervous system tissue needs The theories of that era reflected this belief and used it in an attempt to explain an increasing number of phenomena It was not until the 1950s that it became irrefutably clear that much of human motivation is based not in these drives but rather in a set of innate psychological needs Their physiological basis is less understood and as concepts these needs lend themselves more easily to psycho logical than to physiological theorizing The convergence of evidence from a variety of scholarly efforts suggests that there are three such needs self determination competence and interpersonal relatedness This book is primarily about self determination and competence with particular emphasis on the former and about the processes and structures that relate to these needs The need for interpersonal relatedness while no less important remains to be explored and the findings from those explorations will need to be integrated with the present theory to develop a broad organismic theory of human motivation Thus far we have articulated self determination theory which is offered as a working theory a theory in the making To stimulate the research that will allow it to evolve further we have stated self determination theory in the form of minitheories that relate to more circumscribed domains and we have developed paradigms for testing predictions from the various minitheories

The Physiological Mechanisms of Motivation D.W. Pfaff, 2012-12-06 To scientists engaged in research on the cellular mechanisms in the mammalian brain concepts of motivation seem to be a logical necessity even if they are not fashionable Immersed in the detailed time consuming research required to deal with mammalian nerve cells we usually pay scant attention to the more global brain behavior questions that have arisen from decades of biological and psychological studies We felt it was time to confront these issues namely how far has neuro biological investigation come in uncovering mechanisms by which motivational signals influence behavior At Rockefeller University we have recently held a course on this subject We restricted our treatment to those motivational systems most tractable to physiological approaches and invited scientists skilled in both behavioral issues and physiological techniques to participate This volume results from that course The deans and administration at Rockefeller University provided much help in planning the course and the staff of Springer Verlag assisted in planning the book Gabriele Zummer helped organize both the course and the processing of book chapters They all deserve our thanks December 1981 Donald W Pfaff Professor of Neurobiology and Behavior Rockefeller University
