

Motor Coordination and the Motor Cortex

Motor coordination is not confined to a single region of the brain, but is associated with activity in a range of areas.

The motor cortex is the part of the brain most commonly associated with movement.

It consists of several distinct parts, namely: the primary motor cortex, the premotor cortex, the supplementary motor area, the primary somatosensory cortex, and the posterior parietal cortex.

The primary motor cortex is arguably the most important since this region is responsible for initiating voluntary motion and is distinguished histologically by its containing many large pyramidal neurons known as Betz cells.

The premotor cortex is assumed to play a part in motor control since its projections to the spinal cord are similar to those of the primary motor cortex.

The posterior parietal cortex seems specifically tied to hand-eye coordination and assists with learning new motor tasks.

The supplementary motor area (SMA) is a small region located in front of the part of the primary motor cortex responsible for controlling the legs.

It performs specialized functions such as various kinds of coordination such as coordinating movement on the two sides of the body and organizing actions across time as well as initiating particular kinds of movements and controlling posture.

The somatosensory cortex sits behind the primary motor cortex and is the main part of the brain concerned with the reception and localization of tactile signals.

It also deals with proprioception, the internal feeling of the limbs that allows them to be oriented without constantly looking at them.

Autism: The Movement (Sensing) Perspective a Decade Later Elizabeth B. Torres, Jonathan T. Delafield-Butt, Vikram K. Jaswal, Susan Crawford, Ashok Srinivasan, Brittany Travers, 2025-08-19 A decade ago in 2013 the Research Topic Autism the Movement Perspective proposed the radical idea that using movement and its sensations could help us better understand the many complex layers of autism spectrum disorders Inspired by earlier work from other fields the work positioned front and center approaches from neuromotor control infusing the research with new computational ideas to study autism across the human lifespan Through the lens of motor variability as a form of kinesthetic reafference causal inference and predictive codes the Research Topic brought together a group of researchers parents practitioners and self advocates to rethink autism as sensory motor differences contributing to the emergence of powerful coping mechanisms that advanced our understanding of how the human brain develops and functions Today with new improvements in biosensing technologies and neuroscience and the embodied and affective psychology on which development is based we revisit this Research Topic approaching autism anew through a modernized lens of precision aimed at enabling socio motor agency

impairments in communication and restricted repetitive behaviors that now define the disorders have a profound impact on social interactions But can we go beyond the descriptive observational nature of this definition and objectively measure that amalgamate of motions and sensations that we call behavior In this Research Topic we bring movement and its sensation to the forefront of autism research diagnosis and treatment We gather researchers across disciplines with the unifying goal of recognizing movement and sensory disturbances as core symptoms of the disorder We also hear confirmation from the perspective of autism self advocates and parents Those important sources of evidence along with the research presented in this topic demonstrate without a doubt that profound movement and sensory differences do exist in ASD and that they are quantifiable The work presented in this Research Topic shows us that quantifiable differences in movements have a better chance than current observational techniques to help us uncover subtle solutions that the nervous system with autism has already spontaneously self discovered and utilized in daily living Where the naked eye would miss the unique subtleties that help each individual cope instrumentation and fine kinematic analyses of motions help us uncover inherent capacities and predispositions of the person with autism The work presented in this topic helps us better articulate through the voices of parents and self advocates those sensory motor differences that current inventories could not possibly uncover These differences are seldom perceived as they take place at timescales and frequencies that fall largely beneath our conscious awareness To the person in the spectrum living with this disorder and to the caregiver creating accommodations to help the affected loved one these subtleties are very familiar though Indeed they are often used in clever ways to facilitate daily routines We have waited much too long in science to listen to the very people that we are trying to define understand and help Being autism a social problem by definition it is remarkable that not a single diagnosis inventory measures the dyadic social interaction that takes place between the examiner and the examinees Indeed we have conceived the autistic person within a social context where we are incapable by definition of accepting those differences The burden is rather placed on the affected person to whom much too often we refer to in the third person as non verbal without intentionality without empathy or emotions without a theory of mind among other purely psychological guesses It is then too easy and shockingly allowed to reshape that person to mold that person to better conform to our social expectations and to extinguish behaviors that are socially unacceptable even through the use of aversive punishing reinforcement techniques if need be And yet none of those techniques have had a single shred of objective scientific evidence of their effectiveness We have not objectively measured once nor have we physiologically characterized once any of those perceived features that we so often use to observationally define what we may think the autistic phenotype may be We have not properly quantified beyond paper and pencil methods the effectiveness of interventions in autism Let us not forget when we do our science that we are all part of the broad human spectrum
