Beginning Writers in the Zone of Proximal Development Elizabeth Petrick-Steward, 2012-10-12 How do young children bridge the gap between writing a story with pictures and writing with words? How children learn to use written words to tell a story is a topic important to both cognitive development and early literacy instruction. Using the theoretical framework developed by Vygotsky the behavior of a group of prekindergarten children as they author two consecutive pieces of writing is analyzed. The children tell their stories at first with spoken words and pictures. As they discuss their work in progress in public conferences they discover how to build on and combine existing skills to produce a new skill telling stories with written words. Current descriptive and theoretical perspectives on beginning writing are presented in this volume with a particular focus on Vygotsky's concept of the zone of proximal development a period of sensitivity in which learning advances The proposed mechanism of change is verbal mediation talk among peers and teachers as they discuss work in progress which moves the children through the zone of proximal development An open whole language approach to literacy instruction makes the classroom in this book an ideal arena in which to observe verbal mediation in operation Children are free to question criticize and argue and in the process they collectively advance their developing ability to use written language The work is unique in that the rich and comprehensive data record is reproduced in its entirety More than 400 illustrations of the children s products two books apiece pictured before and after the children s revisions are included along with transcripts of the conferences about each of the pages permitting direct observation of the effects of verbal mediation This dynamic study documents change during a period of time when specific learning is occurring and provides strong support for the value and power of Vygotsky s theoretical framework Stranger by the Creek Anthony Earl Wohlleb,2011-03 As my eyes adjust seeing clearer than I ever have before I realize that I m staring at my own sleeping body on the bed in front of me What is this I have not died I know this I can feel that there is still a connection to the old body I have left behind My only thought I have to get help I have to wake up Grandpa A week I was beginning my summer stay with Grandpa for a week our usual yearly routine This is the first night of my time over here and I thought I was having trouble falling asleep but apparently I was already sleeping and I didn t realize it As I run in a panic towards his closed door and reach for the doorknob I can t grab it My hand passes right through as if I were a ghost What am I I ask myself this and thinking about the doorknob I decide to hesitantly push my way through the door and suddenly I m in his room I immediately run over to Grandpa and my hand passes through him in the same way Something happened I don t know what to call this but I m obviously not me I cried Shortly afterward in the silence and in the middle of my fright a voice questions You feel helpless The golden outline of a man appears I have yet to realize that this man will change my life forever
