development multiple use Other national forest uses including water wildlife and forage were assumed to be neutral Two conjectural timber sales evolved by using Forest Service appraisal methods proved uneconomic Assuming road development by federal appropriation public costs and returns were compared with developed resource uses In terms of least public cost it was shown that the public interest was best served in 1960 by reserving the Bob Marshall Area as wilderness Under wilderness reservation it was found that user benefits would equal 1960 public costs with a reasonable per day user charge Recreation was valued indirectly Aesthetic and vicarious aspects were not analyzed Over time demand will grow for commercial resources in the Wilderness as will recreation use of the Area Conflicts will increase and intensify The Area will become unique as surrounding backcountry is developed Wilderness as a resource serves a recreational user clientele in addition to regular forest resource users Forest Service personnel training related to wilderness concepts and informational interpretive approaches to the public are important in obtaining nationwide public support for wilderness reservation
