Policing Domestic Violence:

Policing Domestic Violence Lawrence W. Sherman, Janell D. Schmidt, Dennis P. Rogan, 1992 Domestic conflict is the largest single cause of violence in America yet police have traditionally been reluctant to make arrests for such assaults In the past decade however that reluctance has been overcome with a 70% increase in arrests for minor assaults heavily concentrated among low income and minority groups Spearheading this nationwide crackdown are the 15 states and the District of Columbia which have adopted unprecedented statutes mandating arrest in cases of misdemeanor domestic battery In Policing Domestic Violence criminologist Lawrence Sherman confronts the tough questions raised by this controversial approach to a complex social problem How should police respond to the millions of domestic violence cases they confront each year when most prosecutors refuse to pursue them Why does arresting unemployed batterers do more harm than good What approaches should police adopt when arrest has totally opposite effects upon haves and have nots Sherman a leading police researcher is the architect of the 1984 Minneapolis Domestic Violence Experiment the first controlled test of the effects of arrest on repeat crime Here he describes what was learned from a multi year federal research program to repeat the experiment in Milwaukee Miami Colorado Springs Omaha and Charlotte The results are both surprising and provocative In fact arrest deters selectively Sherman found that it effectively inhibits some offenders but incites more violence in others It may also deter batterers for a month or so only to make them more violent later on Under this policy therefore some women exchange short term safety for a longer term increase in danger Sherman also shows that compulsory arrest reduces violence against middle class women at the expense of those often black who are poor Some advocates of the policy have endorsed this moral choice but Sherman argues that domestic violence will continue in spite of and sometimes because of our attempts to stop it Further while it is possible to predict which couples will continue to suffer abusive behavior it has been difficult to find effective ways of preventing chronic violence even when arrests are made Relying on arrest as a fix for domestic abuse only underscores the long neglect of underlying social problems and Sherman calls instead for more flexible policies such as community policing that more adequately reflect the diversity of American society

Abuse with Police Data Matthew P. Bland, Barak Ariel, 2020-09-29 This book explores the potential of domestic abuse data to assess the level of harm caused to victims and the amount of resources required to respond to it Policing domestic abuse has become a major activity for the police service in England and Wales Part of the police strategy is to gather hundreds of thousands of detailed records about victims and suspects the single largest set of domestic abuse records available but one that to date has largely unexplored by researchers In this volume Matthew Bland and Barak Ariel analyse three substantial datasets taken from police forces across the country and ask Can police data be used to derive meaningful insight How should we use these data to measure harm Just how much domestic abuse involves a repeat victim Does abuse get more serious over time Can serious domestic abuse be predicted before it occurs This volume illustrates the scale of the challenge the police and other agencies face with reducing domestic abuse A small proportion of individuals generate a majority of harm this book argues that police records offer opportunities to identify these individuals before the harm occurs Demonstrating that statistical techniques can be used to profile domestic abuse to target harm reduction strategies more precisely and even identify a sizable proportion of serious cases before they occur this volume will be of interest to law enforcement officials policing researchers and policy makers interested in reducing the phenomenon of domestic abuse

Domestic Violence Eva Schlesinger Buzawa, Carl G. Buzawa, 1992-09-30 The markedly increased attention focused on violence within families has gripped the concerned interest not only of academic researchers but also that of the public and its law enforcement and criminal justice segments Contemporary recognition of the widespread problem of abuse within the home often dramatically and poignantly detailed has not however led to clear and universally accepted public institutional responses This authoritative volume presents a comprehensive evaluation of approaches policies and practical enforcement measures that have been effected by law enforcement and criminal justice bodies The development of changes in social attitudes to spousal abuse the role of the police and the practical interventions they may impose when contacted the ramifications which decisions to prosecute may have on defendants subsequent behavior and the victims responses to public interventions are topics that are all covered by this book It is a current substantive and practically instructive volume on a social issue of vital importance      Policing Domestic Violence Joyce Plotnikoff, Great Britain. Home Office. Research, Development and Statistics Directorate. Policing and Reducing Crime Unit, 1998      Policing Domestic Violence Janet A. Walker, Laura McNicol, 1994      Policing Domestic Violence Carolyn Hoyle, Andrew Sanders, 1996      Policing Domestic Violence Michele-Lynne Muni, 2012 Why and how do law enforcement agencies develop and change strategies to deal with the silent epidemic of domestic violence Although academics discuss organizational change in the community policing literature police department innovation needs further exploration Outside community policing literature there is a dearth of research that analyzes the process of changing law enforcement strategies policies and procedures Learning how police departments change policies to deal with victimization may offer other agencies valuable information relevant to implementing policies and overcoming obstacles In 21st century policing departments face many unprecedented challenges like gang violence and terrorism Sometimes departments prioritize preventing crimes like street violence guns and drugs because these crimes are visible and immediately pressing This category of crime takes priority over developing policies and strategies that prevent victimization that occurs outside of the public eye The issue is that crime that occurs indoors like domestic violence can reach the public eye Police officers suggest that studies in domestic violence are practical because they encounter domestic violence calls frequently and new information is useful This study worked within a case study design and an organizational change theoretical framework revealing the path taken by the Trenton New Jersey Police Department TPD to change domestic violence strategies and carry out these policies Four questions were explored 1 Which external or internal factors have an independent influence on changing domestic violence policies 2 How are police department dynamics involved in creating a process for changing policies and ensuring compliance with policies 3 What is the perceived utility of domestic violence strategies in assisting victims of domestic violence and 4 What organizational factors are essential in facilitating policy implementation This study provides insight into how organizations make decisions to change and secondly how they implement change Consistent with organizational literature this research suggests that implementation of new domestic violence policies is contingent upon need In general this study suggested that external factors domestic violence homicides provided impetus for changing domestic violence strategies Secondly a change agent dedicated supervisors detectives and interagency collaboration are important during implementation stages Participants also suggested that victim support is increased through interagency collaborations and increased compliance accountability Finally participants suggested that agencies implementing a domestic violence unit focus attention on a change agent training and educating officers public and compliance and accountability Furthermore departments should scan data and analyze their current policies to highlight problems and ensure compliance accountability Several participants also referenced the need for adequate manpower An unanticipated finding was the role of compulsion Organizational change literature consistently points to the role of resistance in impeding change within organizations At the Trenton Police Department officers did not resist instead they felt compelled to change Most participants understood the reasons for changing domestic violence strategies Several participants pointed to the increase in domestic violence homicides over a short period of time In summary from the observations of participants the strengths of the new strategies included victim support increased compliance accountability and improved collaborations      Policing Domestic Violence Lawrence W.
