Power Sharing in Deeply Divided Places Joanne McEvoy, Brendan O'Leary, 2013-04-22 Power sharing may be broadly defined as any set of arrangements that prevents one political agency or collective from monopolizing power whether temporarily or permanently Ideally such measures promote inclusiveness or at least the coexistence of divergent cultures within a state In places deeply divided by national ethnic linguistic or religious conflict power sharing is the standard prescription for reconciling antagonistic groups particularly where genocide expulsion or coerced assimilation threaten the lives and rights of minority peoples In recent history the success record of this measure is mixed

Power Sharing in Deeply Divided Places features fifteen analytical studies of power sharing systems past and present as well as critical evaluations of the role of electoral systems and courts in their implementation Interdisciplinary and international in formation and execution the chapters encompass divided cities such as Belfast Jerusalem Kirkuk and Sarajevo and divided places such as Belgium Israel Palestine Northern Ireland and South Africa as well as the Holy Roman Empire the Saffavid Empire Aceh in Indonesia and the European Union Equally suitable for specialists teachers and students

Power Sharing in Deeply Divided Places considers the merits and defects of an array of variant systems and provides explanations of their emergence maintenance and failings some essays offer lucid proposals targeted at particular places While this volume does not presume that power sharing is a panacea for social reconciliation it does suggest how it can help foster peace and democracy in conflict torn countries
