

The background of the slide is a reproduction of a painting by the English Romantic painter J.M.W. Turner. The painting, titled 'Rain, Steam, and Great Bridge' (1844), depicts a steam locomotive crossing the Maidenhead Railway Bridge over the River Thames. The scene is characterized by soft, atmospheric conditions of rain and steam, with a palette dominated by muted greens, blues, and greys. In the foreground, several lily pads float on the water, adding a touch of nature to the industrial scene. The overall style is Impressionist, emphasizing light and color over fine detail.

outlines the history of the development of national landscapes elaborating on the distinctive nature of riverscapes Drawing on the symbolic potential of rivers to represent life and time the riverscape provided a metaphor for the mythic stream of national history flowing unimpeded out of the past and into the future

Late Style and its Discontents Gordon

McMullan, Sam Smiles, 2016-09-01 Late style is a critical term routinely deployed to characterise the work of selected authors composers and creative artists as they enter their last phase of production often but not only in old age Taken at face value this terminology merely points to a chronological division in the artist's oeuvre late being the antonym of early or the third term in the triad early middle late However almost from its inception the idea of late style or late work has been freighted with aesthetic associations and expectations that promote it as a special episode in the artist's creative life Late style is often characterised as the imaginative response made by exceptional talents to the imminence of their death In their confrontation with death creative artists critics claim produce work that is by turns a determination to continue while strength remains a summation of their life's work and a radical vision of the essence of their craft And because this creative phenomenon is understood as primarily an existential response to a common fate so late style is understood as something that transcends the particularities of place time and medium Critics seeking to understand late work regularly invoke the examples of Titian Goethe and Beethoven as exemplars of what constitutes late work proposing that something unites the late style of authors composers and creative artists who otherwise would not be bracketed together and that lateness per se is a special order of creative work The essays in this collection resist this position Ranging across literature the visual arts music and scientific work the material assembled here looks closely at the material biographical and other contexts in which the work was produced and seeks both to question the assumptions surrounding late style and to prompt a more critical understanding of the last works of writers artists and composers
