House of Commons - Treasury Committee: Money Advice Service - HC 457 Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Treasury Committee, 2013-12-03 The Money Advice Service is not currently fit for purpose The Committee considered whether to recommend that the MAS be scrapped completely but given that the Treasury had already announced its intention to conduct a review of the MAS they granted a stay of execution They asked the Government to expedite this review and recommended that it should be independent rather than led by the Treasury The review must assess whether the MAS should continue to exist and if so how it can overcome the serious problems discussed The current management of the MAS should also explain how they are going to act on the concerns identified The independent review should seek to answer the following questions Should the Money Advice Service or something like it exist as a statutory organisation If so what should the role and strategy of such a body be Should it be a co ordinator commissioner or direct provider of advice What channels should it use If not should the FCA take responsibility for the objectives of the Service Does the FCA need greater statutory powers to hold the Money Advice Service to account What are the views of other bodies in this sector about the way in which the Money Advice Service is now engaging with them To what extent does the work of the Money Advice Service unnecessarily duplicate existing provision What should the role of the Service be in each of the areas in which it operates Is the remuneration of the Service s senior staff set at an appropriate level

Debt Straight , Access to Justice and Legal Aid Asher Flynn, Jacqueline Hodgson, 2017-01-26 This book considers how access to justice is affected by restrictions to legal aid budgets and increasingly prescriptive service guidelines As common law jurisdictions England and Wales and Australia share similar ideals policies and practices but they differ in aspects of their legal and political culture in the nature of the communities they serve and in their approaches to providing access to justice These jurisdictions thus provide us with different perspectives on what constitutes justice and how we might seek to overcome the burgeoning crisis in unmet legal need The book fills an important gap in existing scholarship as the first to bring together new empirical and theoretical knowledge examining different responses to legal aid crises both in the domestic and comparative contexts across criminal civil and family law It achieves this by examining the broader social political legal health and welfare impacts of legal aid cuts and prescriptive service guidelines Across both jurisdictions this work suggests that it is the most vulnerable groups who lose out in the way the law now operates in the twenty first century This book is essential reading for academics students practitioners and policymakers interested in criminal and civil justice access to justice the provision of legal assistance and legal aid
