The Manchester Bantams Caroline Scott,2015-02-28 In May 1916 Major Eustace Lockhart Maxwell a former Indian cavalry officer was given command of an infantry battalion in France After 48 hours with his new unit Maxwell wrote to his family The outstanding characteristic of those who belong to it seems to be their extraordinary self complacency Esprit de corps is a fine thing but the satisfaction with which they regard themselves their battalion its internal economy its gallantry its discipline its everything else is almost indecent If at the end of a month my opinion of them is half as good as their own I shall think myself uncommonly lucky This was the 23rd Manchester Bantam Battalion a unit entirely composed of men of a height between 5ft and 5ft 3 and its esprit de corps was about to be severely tested The Bantams left colorful characterful moving and often

Pershing the Commander in Chief determined that the major memorial to the American Expeditionary Forces would be sited on the summit of Montfaucon Hill. The impressive classical column erected on the summit of Montfaucon Hill can be seen from many parts of the battlefield of the Meuse Argonne 1918. The village of Montfaucon perched on and around one of the most notable heights in the Argonne area was a first day objective for the First American Army in its massive offensive that was launched on 26 September 1918 and which rumbled on until the Armistice. Montfaucon had been the scene of bitter fighting between the French and the Germans in the early stages of the war finally staying securely in German hands. The attack started well with the great numbers of Doughboys easily moving through the first line of the German defense system and indeed good progress was made all along the front even if final objectives were not attained that would have brought the Americans up to the Hindenburg Line defenses. The most notable setback was the failure to capture Montfaucon an objective given to the 79th Division. Why the task of capturing this key part of the German line to a green division composed of draftees and which had only had six weeks or so of training time in France instead of the prescribed three months has never been adequately explained. What has proved to be controversial ever since is why the 4th Division a regular formation that had already been engaged in battle on the Western Front and which gained its objectives on the first day did not seek to assist the 79th when it was clear that it was facing significant difficulties in overcoming the Montfaucon defenses. The outcome was that the village and hill did not fall on the first day. How significant this setback was to the success and the duration of the offensive has also been the subject of considerable discussion. Montfaucon was an important observation point for much of the war providing distant views over considerable amounts of ground and thus invaluable for the German artillery. How much its loss mattered to the Germans when fighting a defensive battle with the defense lines south of it already lost is more open to debate given the vantage points that the Germans continued to enjoy from high ground to the north west and east. Maarten Otte sets the importance of Montfaucon and the ultimately successful effort to capture it within a succinct narrative. In the tours section he takes the visitor on a number of routes so that they can see for themselves the problems on the ground that faced the 79th Division and puts Montfaucon in the context of the wider battle. He also provides a detailed tour of the village and hill itself including the magnificent memorial and the preserved defenses and ruins which surround it. and 2 George Albemarle Bertie Dewar, John Herbert Boraston, 1922 Sir Douglas Haig's Command George Albemarle Bertie Dewar, John Herbert Boraston, 1923 New York Times Current History, 1917
