

Manifesto for a New Medicine

James S. Gordon, MD., Washington, DC, and Donald Moss, Ph.D., Grand Haven, Michigan

Abstract: The general public has shown an increasing desire for complementary and alternative forms of healing. Medicine has pursued a variety of alternative paradigms in recent decades, including the biopsychosocial model, behavioral medicine, holistic health, mind-body medicine, complementary and alternative medicine, and integrative medicine. The present article summarizes the "new medicine" paradigm of James Gordon, Director of the Center for Mind-Body Medicine. This approach emphasizes seven pillars in health care, including: uniqueness, holism, healing partnerships, self-care, other health care systems, group support, and spirituality and transformation. This approach sees mind-body techniques, including biofeedback, hypnosis, and visualization as central.

Complementary and Alternative Medicine

For at least a decade public interest in the United States has grown dramatically in Complementary and Alternative Medicine (or CAM). The National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine (2002) has defined CAM as medical care systems, practices and products that are not presently considered to be a part of either conventional medical practice or the medical school curriculum. Because CAM is making inroads within both health care and medical school education, James Gordon now refers to CAM as therapies and interventions that physicians over 30 did not learn in medical school (2003).

Over 40 % of Americans today are using complementary and alternative therapies as part of their ongoing health care, even though CAM therapies are largely paid out of pocket. CAM is not just a trendy pursuit of the affluent and relatively well population. Rather, current research shows that 69 % of cancer patients are using some form of complementary and alternative therapy for their illness, and over 80 % of cancer patients are interested in learning more about CAM (Richardson, Sanders, Palmer, Greisinger, & Singletary, 2000; Gordon & Curtin, 2000). Similar trends are evident in the use of alternative therapies by individuals with disabilities (Krauss, Godfrey, Kirk, & Eisenberg, 1998), AIDS (Standish, et al., 2001), and with chronic illnesses and conditions (Burke, 2003).
