

Causes and Prevention of Marine – Coastal Corrosion

V. Raghunathan

Vice President - Technologies
Cera-Chem Pvt Ltd

The total corrosion losses faced by the Indian industry especially ports, marine installations, harbours and industries located in the coastal belts accounts to a net some of ₹1,50,000 crores.

These damage costs are irreversible if not attended in due course of time and hence it's imperative to take cognisance of the situation and act upon in time to prevent the losses of machinery and equipment by suitable means of (a) preventive means and the (b) in process maintenance by engaging a proper corrosion prevention, eradication program fine-tuned to balance the situation.

Contrary to popular belief, the coastal area corrossions are, not merely accounted by salt spray corrosion alone but also by the following endurances.

1. Severe attack by microbes like fungi, algae and moss leads to the inevitable organic decay and imminent corrosion which leads to a slow organic inhibited corrosion.
- 1.1 This needs to be address by a preventive maintenance system to avoid the growth of such micro organisms.
- 1.2 As the growth of these organic masses depends totally on the anchoring possibilities based on the roughness of the surface. Hence it's imperative that the surface has to be smooth, repellent to the above, one way or the other.
- 1.3 The problem solution for this area is by addressing with a suitable priming medium after proper scrubbing and application of a massic nature primer to repel water incultation.
- 1.4 The second severe endurance comes from sun's UV rays which tends to break the substrate by two major deterioration factors viz (a) chalking and (b) fading.

- 1.5 This is tackled by a suitable top coat system which is capable of shielding substrate against chalking and fading.
- 1.6 The 3rd major factor which kills is the saline atmosphere (the main constituent of which is NaCl) otherwise called as brine solution. It causes the ultimate corrosion.
- 1.7 Hence a complete painting system capable of highest level of penetration, adhesion and moisture tolerance should be employed to counter the high rate of corrosion for both concrete and metal structures.
- 1.8 The marine corrosion salvation/prevention program totally is a dependent factor on the correct selection of primers, intermediaries and top coats.
- 1.9 This is very crucial for saving the structures made out of M.S and concrete.
2. There have been many attempts to passivate the adverse effects of impact/abrasion and corrosion to structural members of offshore platforms, drilling rigs, pipelines, risers, pilings, wharfs, or any edifice that is located in the splash or tidal zones of a marine environment. There are several known techniques for applying pre-installation
