sociocultural anthropology - A comparative approach to the study of societies and cultures that focuses on differences and similarities in the ways that societies are structured and cultural meanings are created

The term "anthropology" comes from two Greek words: anthropos, meaning "human beings," and logia, meaning "the study of " or "the knowledge of." This study of, or knowledge of, human beings includes everything that humans do currently or have done in the past.

linguistic anthropology

A study of the relationship between language and culture. Linguistic anthropologists explore how people use language, both in a physical sense with regard to how communication is structured, and in a historical sense with regard to how different languages have developed and spread throughout history

Sociocultural anthropologists culture

ethnocentric fallacy
