Housing and the Financial Crisis Edward Glaeser,Todd Sinai,2013-08-19 Conventional wisdom held that housing prices couldn't fall But the spectacular boom and bust of the housing market during the first decade of the twenty first century and millions of foreclosed homeowners have made it clear that housing is no different from any other asset in its ability to climb and crash Housing and the Financial Crisis looks at what happened to prices and construction both during and after the housing boom in different parts of the American housing market accounting for why certain areas experienced less volatility than others It then examines the causes of the boom and bust including the availability of credit the perceived risk reduction due to the securitization of mortgages and the increase in lending from foreign sources Finally it examines a range of policies that might address some of the sources of recent instability International Capital Flow Pressures

Ms.Linda S. Goldberg,Signe Krogstrup,2018-02-16 This paper presents a new measure of capital flow pressures in the form of a recast Exchange Market Pressure index The measure captures pressures that materialize in actual international capital flows as well as pressures that result in exchange rate adjustments The formulation is theory based relying on balance of payments equilibrium conditions and international asset portfolio considerations Based on the modified exchange market pressure index the paper also proposes the Global Risk Response Index which reflects the country specific sensitivity of capital flow pressures to measures of global risk aversion For a large sample of countries over time we demonstrate time variation in the effects of global risk on exchange market pressures the evolving importance of the global factor across types of countries and the changing risk on or risk off status of currencies
