Abstract: The object of our research is to determine the connection of negative attachment in connection with an individual's personality. We focus on comparing attachment and personality characteristics in psychiatric patients and the general population. The research sample consists of 84 respondents (N = 84), of which 48 were men and 36 were women, aged 24 to 68 years and the average age of all respondents was 43.42. Within the methods, we chose two questionnaires: The Experiences in Close Relationships-Revised (ECR-R) to measure attachment and The Eysenck Personality Questionnaire-Revised (EPQ-R) to identify personality traits. We observed a statistically significant difference in the type of attachment between the study sample and the comparison group. We did not observe a statistically significant relationship between the neuroticism scale and the anxious/ambivalent type of attachment in the study sample. There was no positive statistically significant relationship between the neuroticism scale and the avoidant type of attachment in the study sample. We found a positive statistically significant relationship between the extraversion scale and the secure type of attachment in all respondents.

Keywords: personal traits; attachment-neuroticism; extraversion anxious scale; psychiatric patients.

Negotiating Realities Stephen Tilley, 1995-01-01 This contribution to the conversation about psychiatric nursing practice based on accounts of conversations in practice makes an original contribution to the methodology of psychiatric nursing research and to understanding the basis of practice Psychiatric and Mental Health Nursing Stephen

Tilley, 2008-04-15 Psychiatric and Mental Health Nursing The Field of Knowledge provides an analytical and critical introduction to the current state of knowledge in psychiatric and mental health nursing in the UK The first section of the book explores current professional disciplinary and educational contexts In the second section leading UK authors from diverse academic settings provide case studies of the knowledge and scientific traditions they draw on to inform their practice understand patient needs and foster different aspects of nursing practice In the final section the UK authors comment on each other's accounts Those chapters and comments are then discussed by leading overseas academics to provide an invaluable international perspective The final stage is a sociologically informed analysis which identifies sociopolitical trends in order to make sense of the UK and international views The editor then assesses the potential for intellectual integration and collective advance in psychiatric and mental health nursing Communicating Care Paul

Crawford, Brian Brown, Peter Nolan, 1998 The authors of this book use their unique blend of experience to synthesise theoretical studies They offer critical analysis of a wide range of examples of good and bad use of language in order to guide nurses towards models of good practice Full consideration is given to the changing nature of the health care environment and to the need to address ethical legal and professional issues beyond the fundamentals of patient nurse interaction
