

Shareholder Wealth Effects of Merger & Acquisition

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

Merger and acquisition (M&A) are mostly aimed at building internal capacity, attaining cross boarder expansion, increasing the market share, growing current business when organic growth has become challenging, and assisting in risk diversification. In addition, they are poised to develop synergies and build economies of scale and diversification. However, there has been evidence of a rapid decline in stock run-ups of U.S targeted companies preceding M&A announcements over the past many years. The main reason for mergers and acquisitions firms is to generate more profits than the combined profits of the merging firms. Liberalization and globalization have contributed to companies becoming more aggressive and deciding on M&A that enhances their competitiveness in the market. However, corporate announcements may destroy or create shareholder wealth to a sum of millions of dollars. The report critically discusses a recent academic article on the shareholder wealth effects of a corporate announcement of merger and acquisition.

The Article: Dutordoir, M., Vagenas-Nanos, E., Verwijmeren, P., and Wu, B. (2021). A rundown of merger target run-UPS. Financial Management, 50(2), 487-518.

Contribution to the Literature

The article's key contribution to the literature is providing new insight for corporate managers that the current presumptions about the target run-ups' magnitude as per older empirical studies should be revised. Target run-ups have considerably decreased over time and this research provides potential explanations for the observed phenomenon. In addition, the findings are helpful for regulators and policymakers by recommending that more stringent insider trading principles have restricted premerger targeted run-ups. The establishments that target run-ups of mergers are examples of declaration of share price patterns. The article offers strong evidence that target
