Why Companies Do Not Pursue Attractive Mergers and Acquisitions Richard B. Connell, 2008 There are substantial bodies of literature that advance theory about why merger and acquisition candidates are found to be unattractive why negotiations are not concluded and why the benefits of companies that are acquired are not realised Little if any research identifies why merger and acquisition opportunities are not pursued in the period after candidates are analysed and found to be attractive but before negotiations begin This study addresses this period by developing a theoretical framework of the variables that intervene to reverse decisions to pursue apparently attractive candidates before negotiations begin and which in doing so result in missed opportunities The study is informed primarily by the strategic management content literature but draws from the strategy process literature including streams in strategic decision making SDM and behavioural decision theory BDT This is a critical book for business scholars that provides an important perspective that has not yet been studied

Intercultural Communication with China Fred Dervin, Regis Machart, 2017-05-15 A major objective of this book is to identify the key determinants of the East and the West in the field of intercultural communication It examines but also counter attacks essentialist and culturalist analyses of intercultural communication between China and the rest of the world Offering a cross country examination and comparison of drought awareness and experience this book shows two fields of research which are complementary but rarely found side by side i e the Arts and Intercultural Encounters serve as illustrations for theoretical and methodological discussions about intercultural communication between China and the West Scholarly and media discourses will find this work thought provoking instructive and informative

Global Ambitions and Local Identities Galit Ailon, 2007-06-01 Until recently international mergers of companies have been seen as purely financial ventures without any concern for what they meant for the people involved. However, attitudes are gradually changing. This study of a successful Israeli high tech company's merger with an American competitor offers an important contribution to a better understanding of the social and personal ramifications of mergers. Based upon in depth fieldwork, the book explores the reality behind the statistics, balance sheets and managerial prescriptions that are the focus of most studies of international mergers and acquisitions. Offering a richly detailed description of everyday work life, the author reveals the dramas of identity that unfold as a consequence of the company's attempts to redefine the boundaries of the organizational collective by adding to it people from another country. The book debunks many myths used to support arguments both for and against globalization and offers instead an in depth depiction and a grounded assessment of its everyday realities.
