

States' Rights & Slavery

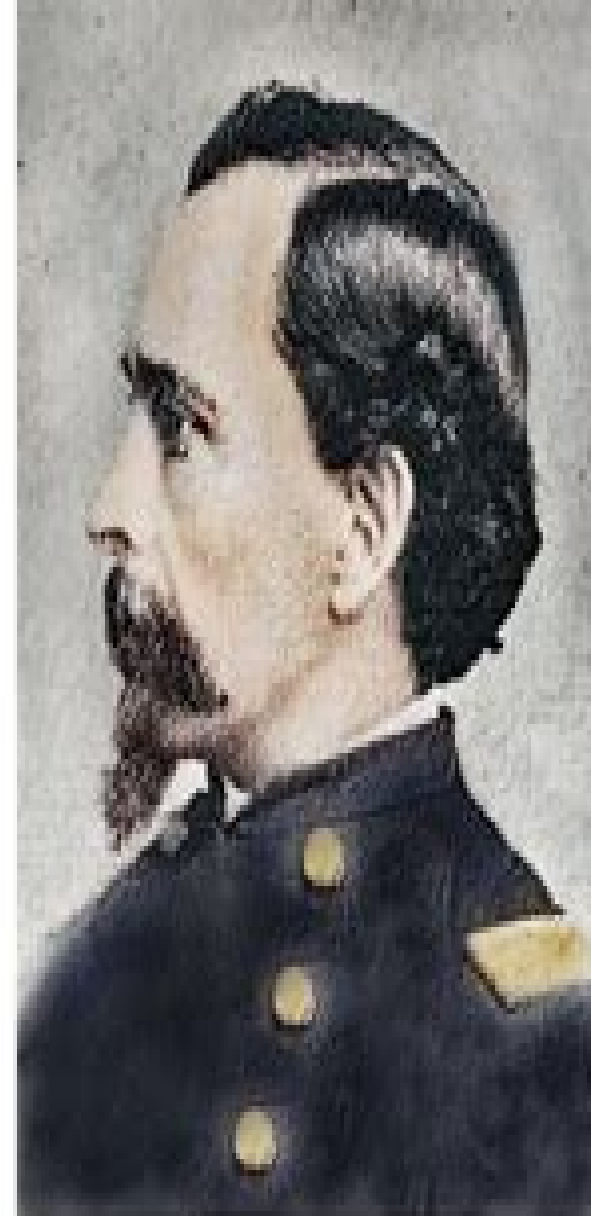

In 1860, the U.S. was the largest slaveholding country in the world. Southern states had economies based on growing cotton and held over 3 million slaves. They attributed the cause of the war to states' rights. But the conflict over states' rights centered on slavery and reached a climax as U.S. territories joined the Union as free states or slave states.

William N. Meserve

1840 - 1928

William N. Meserve was born in Barrington, N.H. and in 1862 enlisted in Company K, 35th Infantry. He was wounded twice at Antietam and rose to the rank of Major by the end of the war. He is best remembered for the extensive diary he kept during the war. After the war, he became a dentist and in 1870 received religious inspiration and became an evangelist minister. His son, Frederick, while estranged from his father, was inspired to work with his father and publish his father's diary. In the process, Frederick created what became the most extensive collection of Civil War photographs, most of which were focused on Abraham Lincoln. In 2012, the entire collection was acquired by Yale University.
