Metallic Minerals On The Deep Seabed:

Metallic Minerals on the Deep Seabed G. A. Gross, C. R. McLeod, 1987 Technology developed in recent years has made it possible to explore mineral occurrences on the deep seabed that are analogous to many mineral deposits mined on land. This paper reviews the main types of occurrences on the deep seabed, their geological setting in relation to major geological features, and their proximity to land areas. Brief notes on the mineral occurrences describe their type and depositional environment. A world map shows islands and continents, areas 370 km from land, major tectonic features, the distribution of manganese nodules and crusts, various types of metalliferous sediments and crusts, and areas where hydrothermal processes are now or have been active on the seafloor. Mineral Resources of the Deep Seabed United States.
