Modelling the Efficiency of Family and Hired Labour Prem Jung Thapa, 2017-11-01 This title was first published in 2003 The principal economic units in most developing countries are family based farm households Empirical models that recognize the dual role of the farm household as producer and consumer in a theoretically consistent manner are essential tools for policy analyses This book provides an important extension of the conventional farm household model by developing an analytical framework that allows for efficiency differences between family and hired labour as inputs in farm production The model is estimated with survey data from the southern lowland region of Nepal The estimation strategy is a two step process The first step estimates a farm level production function in which is embedded a test for heterogeneity between family and hired labour The labour heterogeneity detected in the production function estimation is incorporated at the second step in the labour supply estimation in a theoretically consistent manner The methodological novelty is to relate the shadow wage rate for family labour to the observed market wage rate for hired labour adjusted for the differential productivity of family and hired labour detected in the production function estimation Modelling the Efficiency of Family and Hired Labour Prem Jung Thapa, 2017-11-01 This title was first published in 2003 The principal economic units in most developing countries are family based farm households Empirical models that recognize the dual role of the farm household as producer and consumer in a theoretically consistent manner are essential tools for policy analyses This book provides an important extension of the conventional farm household model by developing an analytical framework that allows for efficiency differences between family and hired labour as inputs in farm production The model is estimated with survey data from the southern lowland region of Nepal The estimation strategy is a two step process The first step estimates a farm level production function in which is embedded a test for heterogeneity between family and hired labour The labour heterogeneity detected in the production function estimation is incorporated at the second step in the labour supply estimation in a theoretically consistent manner The methodological novelty is to relate the shadow wage rate for family labour to the observed market wage rate for hired labour adjusted for the differential productivity of family and hired labour detected in the production function estimation The Indian Journal of Labour Economics ,2006 The British National Bibliography Arthur James Wells, 2003 Book Review Index Cumulation Dana Ferguson, 2005-09 Book Review Index provides quick access to reviews of books periodicals books on tape and electronic media representing a wide range of popular academic and professional interests The up to date coverage wide scope and inclusion of citations for both newly published and older materials make Book Review Index an exceptionally useful reference tool More than 600 publications are indexed including journals and national general interest publications and newspapers Book Review Index is available in a three issue subscription covering the current year or as an annual cumulation covering the past year Rural Development Abstracts ,2004 American Book Publishing Record ,2003 Forthcoming Books Rose Arny, 2003

Books In Print 2004-2005 Ed Bowker Staff, Staff Bowker, Ed, 2004 World Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology Abstracts, 1996 Labour Heterogeneity in a Farm Household Model Prem Jung Thapa, 1999 Technical Efficiency of Rural Nepalese Farmers as Affected by Farm Family Education and Extension Services Kiran Prasad Bhatta, Akira Ishida, Kenji Taniguchi, Raksha Sharma, 2015

An analysis of agricultural productivity revealed that capital that is inputs other than land and labor is an important production input that is also significant. Land also has a positive and significant contribution. Family labor is positive however hired labor is negative though both are insignificant. Moreover the technical inefficiency model revealed that agricultural extension services provided by non governmental organizations have a positive and significant contribution and it increases technical efficiency of the farm. Therefore we recommend policy that increases the role of non governmental organizations in providing agricultural extension services. Similarly the share of educated persons per household is also significantly and positively related to technical efficiency so providing educational services to these households may also be helpful. However in contrast to our expectation government extension is found to have a negative effect on efficiency though it is insignificant. As we can expect because governmental organization takes the lion's share in terms of coverage policies should be made favorable to improve their performance in providing agricultural extension services. An analysis of technical efficiency on farms revealed that on average they are operating well below the frontier with the average technical efficiency being 69% obviously there is ample room for improvement. With little changes in the production process technical efficiency of the selected farms could be increased on average by up to 30%.

Rural outmigration and the gendered patterns of agricultural labor in Nepal Slavchevska, Vanya, Doss, Cheryl, Mane, Erdgin, Kaaria, Susan, Kar, Anuja, Villa, Victor, 2020-12-11

In Nepal as in many developing countries male outmigration from rural areas is significant and is rapidly transforming the sending communities. Using primary data collected from households in rural Nepali communities this study analyzes the effects of male out migration from rural agricultural areas on women's and men's work on and off the farm. Using an instrumental variable approach to correct for endogeneity related to outmigration the study finds differential impacts on agricultural labor for the men and women who remain. Men reduce labor in non farm work without significantly increasing their labor allocation to other activities. Women on the other hand increase their work on the farm taking on new responsibilities and moving from contributing family workers to primary farmers. Despite their growing roles as primary farmers women in households with a migrant do not increase their work in higher value activities and remain predominantly concentrated in producing staple grain.

Allocative Efficiency of Nepalese Farms Jagadish Chandra Gautam, 1975 Wage Labour in Developing Agriculture Sunil Kanwar, 1998

This is an empirical study of labour supply and demand issues in semi arid developing agriculture explicitly accounting for the presence of the production risk that impinges on farm decision making. It further analyses and empirically tests for the interdependence between the production risk that farmers face in the process of self cultivation and the labour market risk or uncertainty of finding off farm work that they face when operating in the local labour market The empirical estimation is based on a unique and relatively comprehensive panel data set relating to a sample of rural households operating in the Indian semi arid tropics The presence of unemployment in the local labour market is acknowledged by the formulation and estimation of a disequilibrium model of the labour market supplementing the partial analyses of labour supply and demand A comparison of the results of the alternative models partial and simultaneous allows a more complete analysis of the issues involved

Farmer Education and Farm Efficiency in Nepal Dean T. Jamison, 1984 Labour Relations in Agriculture Shiva Prashad Sharma, 1983 Migration for Labour and Its Impact on Farm Production in Nepal Amina Maharjan, Siegfried Bauer, Béatrice Knerr, 2013 Labour Out Migration and Its Impact on Farm Families in the Mid Hills of Nepal Amina Maharjan, 2010 Consistent Aggregation of Family and Hired Labor in Agricultural Production Functions Howard Barnum, Lyn Squire, 1978

An estimated production function for the Muda river valley in Malaysia is used to examine three issues 1 whether or not labor marginal product is zero 2 whether or not farm households allocate resources efficiently and 3 whether or not agricultural labor markets are characterized by dualism In areas where an active labor market exists the first two of these issues may be closely related to the third if family and hired labor can be considered separate factors of production This study shows that if the labor aggregate is defined as the sum of family and hired labor the resulting production function estimate will be subject to specification bias which will render empirical tests of the issues mentioned invalid Using separate variables for family and hired labor it is shown that the marginal product of family labor is positive and significantly different from zero and that farms are approximately allocatively efficient The study does find however some substantiation for a mild degree of dualism in the labor market
