There may be underlying processes "why one was telling this account?" of your thing(s) about organizational and everyday life. Organizations have become the dominant feature of a modern society. They make the transition from a traditional society with an apparatused community to a modern society dominated by individualism. The industrial revolution of 19th century gave rise to complex institutions, specialized structures of labor, and specialization, production roles. As a result, organizations are in the business of "organizing." Classrooms provide insight about the organization's mission, goals, tasks in the performance, coordination of funds, and hierarchy of authority. The research efforts are not only to be in education, but also in organizational behavior and culture.
