

INVESTIGATING WRITING

Threshold Concepts and Transfer

Colette Frommeyer

This untitled collage was created by Miami University student Colette Frommeyer. It illustrates the results of her research findings in response to the second assignment at the end of this chapter. She uses a tree, whose roots are a collection of the genres in which she writes. Each genre, she says, "funnels into a strong writing foundation which develops stems and leaves. . . . The genres intersect and interact with other genres, channels, and audiences to create a culmination of new, culturally-relevant sub-genres. Like a tree, these genres are affected by outside forces like weather, which represent the social forces that shape and determine its longevity." Frommeyer's collage was created using Canva.

ogy from a psychology textbook. You will be introduced to threshold concepts in writing — ideas based on Writing Studies research that can transform the way you approach writing.

Have you ever wondered why every teacher seems to have a different set of rules for writing? Or why writing seems to be more difficult for some people than for others? Or why some people use big words or special jargon when it seems like they don't have to? This book invites you to explore questions such as these by reading research about writing, comparing your own writing experiences with those of others, and finding your own answers by conducting research and writing.

This book invites you to engage with research about writing conducted in the field of Writing Studies,¹ much as your textbooks in biology or psychology introduce you to and invite you to engage with the research of those fields. Writing Studies researchers study how writing works, how people write, and how best to learn writing. From this book, then, you'll learn about the subject — writing — just as you would learn about biology from a biology textbook or about psychology

Invisible Forces Pei Pei Liu, 2023-12-01 Explores the critical role that classroom educators play in supporting student motivation throughout the transition from high school to college Educators consistently identify student motivation as a top concern particularly during the transition to college but often feel helpless to influence it Some assume that students are simply motivated or not Others are daunted by trying to shape an unobservable psychological phenomenon Invisible Forces provides a framework for thinking of student motivation as a set of internal mindsets that are promoted or thwarted through a complex ecology of personal classroom institutional and systemic factors Using the method of portraiture Pei Pei Liu brings this ecology to life The book presents a series of four rich case studies of educators efforts to support student motivation and the challenges they encounter in secondary and postsecondary writing classrooms Attuned to the unique status of writing based courses as a near universal academic experience throughout the transition from high school to college these portraits shed light on different strategies make a case for institutional support of instructors and pave the way for greater alignment between secondary and postsecondary settings
