5.1 Photosynthesis

Overview of photosynthesis

Light dependent reaction is linked to photosynthesis

Light independent reaction is linked to photosynthesis

The light dependent reaction

Photosynthesis is a process by which plants and other organisms use light energy to convert carbon dioxide and water into glucose and oxygen.

The light dependent reaction is the first stage of photosynthesis. It occurs in the thylakoid membranes of the chloroplasts.

During the light dependent reaction, light energy is used to split water molecules into oxygen and hydrogen ions. The oxygen is released as a by-product, and the hydrogen ions are used to form reduced NADP.

The light dependent reaction is linked to the light independent reaction (the Calvin cycle) by the transfer of reduced NADP and ATP.

5.2 Respiration

Overview of respiration

Respiration is a process by which organisms release energy from glucose. It occurs in the mitochondria.

The light independent reaction (the Calvin cycle) is the second stage of photosynthesis. It occurs in the stroma of the chloroplasts.

During the light independent reaction, carbon dioxide is fixed into a three-carbon compound, which is then reduced to form glucose. This process requires energy from the light dependent reaction in the form of reduced NADP and ATP.

The light independent reaction is linked to the light dependent reaction by the transfer of reduced NADP and ATP.

5.3 The structure and function of the cell

Structure of a cell

The cell is the basic unit of life. It is a structure that contains all the components necessary for life.

The cell is bounded by a cell membrane, which controls the entry and exit of substances. The cell membrane is made of a phospholipid bilayer.

The cell contains various organelles, including the nucleus, mitochondria, and chloroplasts. Each organelle has a specific function.

The nucleus contains the cell's genetic material (DNA). It is surrounded by a nuclear envelope.

The mitochondria are the powerhouses of the cell. They are where most of the cell's energy is produced through respiration.

The chloroplasts are the sites of photosynthesis in plant cells. They contain chlorophyll, which captures light energy.

5.4 The control of the cell

Control of the cell

The cell is controlled by a complex system of signals and feedback loops. These signals regulate the cell's growth, division, and death.

The cell cycle is the process by which a cell divides to form two daughter cells. It is controlled by a series of checkpoints.

The cell's growth is regulated by growth factors, which are proteins that stimulate cell division.

The cell's death is regulated by apoptosis, which is a programmed cell death process.
