

What's So Special About Rhetorical Deliberation?

Rhetorical Deliberation is practical argumentation, i.e., it is about actions/decisions—unlike, e.g., scientific argumentation, which is epistemic, i.e., about truth.

It is characteristic of practical argumentation that there are usually several relevant arguments on both sides of any issue.

They will usually belong to several different dimensions (economics ... ethics ... aesthetics ...) which cannot be reduced to one common denominator (they are incommensurable). In contrast, epistemic argumentation only recognizes one dimension: truth.

This means that in practical argumentation, consensus cannot be expected even if the disagreeing parties argue reasonably.

There will be “reasonable disagreement” (Rawls), “legitimate dissensus”.
