

A topographic map of Southern California and the surrounding Pacific Ocean. The map uses color to represent elevation, with green for lower elevations and brown/purple for higher elevations. Several large, thick yellow arrows are overlaid on the map, indicating the direction of the Santa Ana Winds. These arrows originate from the inland areas, particularly from the northeast and east, and point towards the coast, following the general orientation of the mountain ranges. The text 'Santa Ana Winds' is written in white with a black outline in the lower-left portion of the map.

Santa Ana Wind:

A Vertical Perspective of Santa Ana Winds in a Canyon Bill C. Ryan, 1969 Some Characteristics of the Three-dimensional Structure of Santa Ana Winds Michael A. Fosberg, 1966 The Santa Ana Winds of Southern California in the Context of Fire Weather Yang Cao, 2015

The Santa Ana winds represent a high impact weather event owing to the intimate relationship between the extremely dry fast winds and the wildfire threat. The winds can be locally gusty particularly in the complex terrain of San Diego county where the airflow has characteristics of downslope windstorms. These winds can cause and or rapidly spread wildfires the threat of which is particularly acute during the autumn season before the onset of winter rains. It remains a day to day challenge to accurately predict wind gust speed especially in the mountainous regions. Our study employs large physics ensembles composed of high resolution simulations of severe downslope windstorms that involve an exhaustive examination of available model physical parameterizations. Model results are calibrated and validated against the San Diego Gas and Electric SDG E mesonet observations a dense homogenous and well positioned network with uniform high quality. Results demonstrate model horizontal resolution model physics random perturbations and landuse database can have a material effect on the strength location and timing of Santa Ana winds in real data simulations. A large model physics ensemble reveals the land surface model to be most crucial in skillful wind predictions which are particularly sensitive to the surface roughness length. A surprisingly simple gust parameterization is proposed for the San Diego network based on the discovery that this homogeneous mesonet has a nearly invariant network averaged gust factor. The gust forecast technique is of special interest in the context of routine weather combined with atmospheric humidity and fuel moisture information. A real time wildfire threat warning system the Santa Ana Wildfire Threat Index SAWTI has been developed to effectively communicate the upcoming Santa Ana wind strength with respect to the anticipated fire danger to first responders and the public. In addition to the wind and gust forecast techniques attempts have been made to skillfully model two essential elements that SAWTI is heavily dependent on i.e the live fuel moisture and the greenness using meteorological information. The models developed can skillfully determine these essential elements from both forecast and reanalysis data.

Santa Ana Wind Events in Southern California Rebecca Stedman Rowland, 2011 The Santa Ana Wind Terry Elmo Stephenson, 1943 Winds Over Wildlands, 1964 Wind Louise M. Pryke, 2023-08-15

A natural and cultural history of wind from ancient deity to Twister. By turns creative and destructive wind spreads seeds fills sails and disperses the energy of the sun. Worshipped since antiquity wind has molded planets determined battles and shaped the evolution of life on earth yet this invisible element remains intangible and unpredictable. In this book Louise M Pryke explores wind's natural history as well as its cultural life in myth religion art and literature. Beyond these ancient imaginings Pryke also traces how wind inspired modern scientific innovations and appeared in artistic works as diverse as the art of Van Gogh the poetry of Keats and the blockbuster film.

Santa Ana Winds of Southern California and Northern Baja California SoCal are the primary weather drivers of wildfires that frequently and infamously ravage this topographically and demographically complex region As the available wind observations are scarce Santa Ana Winds SAWs have not been adequately studied on climate timescales Yet wildfire behavior has been changing wildly even during my dissertation work For example the largest wildfire in California s recorded history occurred in December of 2017 well outside the unique fall season for the largest wildfires typical of this region This dissertation presents results of my efforts to understand Santa Ana wind behavior on climate timescales and in our changing climate In Chapter 1 I developed and analyzed the longest and most complete record of hourly SAWs heretofore available These results provide a robust perspective on both high and low frequency SAW behavior uncovering previously unknown climate influences on SAW activity and laying the groundwork for eventual studies into seasonal SAW predictability Notably the 65 year record of hourly SAWs did not manifest clear long term trends In Chapter 2 using a dynamically downscaled training data set I developed an approach to statistically downscale coarsely resolved winds from a global Reanalysis with spatial resolution typical of global climate models GCMs The result was an efficient and skillful downscaling of coarse daily surface wind vectors onto a fine grid over the SoCal domain spanning 70 years From these daily wind fields I derived SAWs and validated them against my previously validated SAWs derived in Chapter 1 from our dynamical training data set A capacity to statistically downscale daily winds from reanalyses and global climate models was thus developed and applied in Chapter 3 to a set of eight GCMs yielding an ensemble of daily 10X10 km wind data sets covering SoCal and spanning a historical and future projected time period from 1950 to 2100 Analyses of these data yielded physically meaningful robust and clear projections of SAW activity gradually decreasing and constricting around its traditional seasonal peak centered on December These results provide robustness nuance and meteorological context to expectations of future SoCal wildfire activity
