Recovery From Aphasia:

Redefining Recovery from Aphasia Dalia Cahana-Amitay, Martin Albert, 2015-01-07 This book focuses on two fundamental aspects of brain language relations one concerns the neural organization of language in the healthy brain the other challenges current approaches to treatment of aphasia and offers a new theory for recovery from aphasia The essence of the book lies in the phrase neural multifunctionality the constant and dynamic incorporation of non linguistic functions into language models of the intact brain The book makes the claim that language is a construction created as we use it and cannot be understood as being supported by neurally based linguistic networks only Rather language emerges from the constant and dynamic interaction among neural networks subserving cognitive affective and praxic functions with neural networks subserving lexical retrieval naming sentence processing comprehension and discourse communication conversation In persons with stroke induced aphasia neural networks for executive system function attention memory motor system function visual system function and emotion interact with neural networks for language to produce the aphasia profile and to influence recovery from aphasia Consequently neural multifunctionality in aphasia explains individual differences in the lesion deficit model and continued recovery over time redefining the concept of recovery from aphasia and offering new opportunities for treatment Recovery from Aphasia Joseph M. New Techniques for Identifying the Neural Substrates of Language Argye Hillis, 2002 This issue includes studies demonstrating how advanced imaging techniques and new methods of recording brain function can reveal areas of the brain that are essential for specific language processes The first two papers report use of arterial spin labelling ASL perfusion MRI to identify areas of poor blood flow hypoperfusion that have impaired neural function The first paper describes a group study that demonstrates that severity of language impairment in aphasic patients is more strongly correlated with extent of hypoperfused tissue than with extent of infarct The second paper is a detailed single case study of a patient with reading impairment While conventional MRI in this patient did not reveal a lesion in regions of the brain that are thought to be crucial for reading such as angular gyrus ASL perfusion MRI revealed poor blood flow in the angular gyrus which likely accounts for the patient s deficits The third paper reports a group study that employed contrast bolus tracking Gadolinium perfusion MRI to evaluate mechanisms of early aphasia recovery Results indicate that rapid resolution of aphasia in acute stroke patients over the first three days occurs only in patients who show restored blood flow reperfusion to previously hypoperfused language cortex These results are used as a springboard for discussing the types of interventions that are likely to be useful in various stages of aphasia recovery The next paper illustrates how M Diffusion Tensor Imaging which elegantly show discrete fibre tracts and lesions within them can be used to answer questions about connections and disconnections in fibre pathways that underlie language and aphasia The final paper discusses how new methods of analysing electrical activity from the cortex recorded from implanted subdural grids can reveal areas of the brain involved in American Sign Language versus spoken English

Acquired Speech and Language Disorders Bruce E.
