Forging a British World of Trade David Thackeray, 2019-01-31 Brexit is likely to lead to the largest shift in Britain's economic orientation in living memory Some have argued that leaving the EU will enable Britain to revive markets in Commonwealth countries with which it has long standing historical ties Their opponents maintain that such claims are based on forms of imperial nostalgia which ignore the often uncomfortable historical trade relations between Britain and these countries as well as the UK's historical role as a global rather than chiefly imperial economy Forging a British World of Trade explores how efforts to promote a British World system centred on promoting trade between Britain and the Dominions grew and declined in influence between the 1880s and 1970s At the beginning of the twentieth century many people from London to Sydney Auckland and Toronto considered themselves to belong to culturally British nations British politicians and business leaders invested significant resources in promoting trade with Australia Canada New Zealand and South Africa out of a perception that these were great markets of the future However ideas about promoting trade between British peoples were racially exclusive From the 1920s onwards colonized and decolonizing populations questioned and challenged the basis of British World networks making use of alternative forms of international collaboration promoted firstly by the League of Nations and then by the United Nations Schemes for imperial collaboration amongst ethnically British peoples were hollowed out by the actions of a variety of political and business leaders across Asia and Africa who reshaped the functions and identity of the Commonwealth
