Employer Involvement in Area Regeneration Alan McGregor, 1999 It is generally agreed that the single greatest area of weakness in area regeneration is in the process of economic regeneration which involves reducing unemployment and increasing the number of paid jobs It is also clear that the long term unemployed face multiple disadvantages in trying to get into the labour market This new study fills a gap in our knowledge about the effectiveness of schemes developed to date which actively involve employers in targeting the employment problems of disadvantaged areas The authors look at 12 case studies of innovative projects drawing out general patterns and concerns for good practice They provide a review of the literature to date and an indispensable directory of different approaches to involving employers Employer involvement in area regeneration is essential reading for practitioners searching for solutions to solve employment problems in disadvantaged areas for academics and students involved in developing the theory and for all those involved in economic regeneration

The Jobs Gap in Britain's Cities Ivan Turok, Nicola Edge, 1999 This unique report examines the uneven pattern of economic and employment change across Britain in the last two decades focusing on the 20 largest cities It explores how the workforce has responded eg through outmigration outcommuting and reduced economic participation and looks at the impact on recorded unemployment The authors argue that an understanding of these effects is vital to urban policy and area regeneration as well as to a range of national economic and social policies that are currently insensitive to geographical disparities The focus is at the city wide scale to provide the overview and essential context within which local and neighbourhood level processes and policies need to be located The report suggests that outmigration and outcommuting provide inadequate responses to urban economic problems and that a more thoroughgoing policy of employment expansion is needed The jobs gap in Britain's cities provides a clear and accessible analysis of employment trends and problems and has important implications for many different strands of economic and social policy including policies towards unemployment welfare reform urban regeneration and regional development It is important reading therefore for policy makers at national and local government levels researchers at various levels and teachers in universities and higher education Soziale Stadt — Zwischenbilanzen Uwe-Jens Walther, 2013-10-05 Mit dem Programm Die Soziale Stadt reagiert der Staat auf Tendenzen sozialer Spaltung und Ausgrenzung Es soll wirtschaftliche wie soziale Abwärtsspiralen stoppen das Verwaltungshandeln wirksamer gestalten und bürgerchaftliche Potenziale mobilisieren Der Band liefert erste Einschätzungen der neuen Praxis und diskutiert deutsche wie europäische Beispiele ebenso wie Veränderungen des Sozialstaates Er präsentiert empirische Analysen und kritische Positionen der Stadtsoziologie als Zwischenbilanz zu einem aktuellen Handlungsfeld von Stadtpolitik und Stadtplanung
