

John Berryman

Berryman suffered a great loss at 12 when his father shot himself outside the boy's window. This event haunted him throughout his life, and recurred as a subject in his poetry. After his mother remarried, John took his stepfather's name and lived in Massachusetts and New York City.

Graduated from Columbia in 1939, then went to Cambridge to study. The first of three marriages came in 1942, and six years later he published his first important book of poetry, The Dispossessed.

In 1955, after teaching at Harvard and Princeton, Berryman took a position at the University of Minnesota, where he remained until his death.

Berryman's great poetic breakthrough occurred after he published 77 Dream Songs in 1964.

Berryman was elected a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1967, and that same year Life magazine ran a feature story on him.

In 1968 Berryman published a second volume of Dream Songs, entitled His Toy, His Dream, His Rest.

The frankness of Berryman's work influenced his friend Robert Lowell and other Confessional poets like Anne Sexton. The poet's lifelong struggles with alcoholism and depression ended in 1972, when he jumped off a Minneapolis bridge in the dead of winter.

"You should always be trying to write a poem you are unable to write, a poem you lack the technique, the language, the courage to achieve. Otherwise you're merely imitating yourself, going nowhere, because there's always existed."

"We must travel in the direction of our fear."

A scholar, a professor, a poet and a key figure in the "Confessional Poetry" movement.
