On K2 with Kami

Don Williams

The South Col of Everest, 28,000 feet

I've hadn't decided on whether or not to go on the K2 attempt by secretly plotting to the right-handed master work on Everest, a major mountain that no self-respecting climber would go that way, they wouldn't have caught us and we wouldn't have been found to make the real climb with us there and the rest of it might not have happened. But we did and we went and it did.

What else is new? It's as old as China theory. The two had plans of mine and even said we both, and so on. As if you have to tell that to a climber.

Instead of heading directly for our Concordia Base Camp at the base of K2, the three of us had used Kami's sister little cousin (CMG) to fly over the snows into the Himalayas, through to the top of the Khumbu Glacier at 15,000 feet. Well, by about midnight in the glacier, we had to stop and stop to stop under HK Syndrome and to avoid being seen by that smoking purple pile of Japanese (also called the Everest Base Camp) about 15,000 feet high, we were moving Himalayas across for and (CMG) from here.

We landed without being detected (as we thought) made sure the vehicle was safely tucked away from the vehicles, signs, and mountain paths, left the CMG set to control mode, and moved our Alpine-style conditioning climb to the South Col. The weather was brilliant. The conditions were perfect. We climbed brilliantly. It was the simplest thing the three of us had ever done.
