Bell,1999-09-01 This book reopens and restructures the grand debate on the nature of economic development in China prior to the Communist revolution It rejects the debate s old contours in which quantitative data were used to argue that the trajectory of Chinese development was either positive or negative Instead the author combines quantitative analysis with a detailed study of local politics culture and gender to explain the shaping of the modern Chinese economy Focusing on silk production in Wuxi county in the Yangzi Delta the author argues that local elites used social dominance to build a silk industry continuum one industry fusing modern factory production with older patterns of peasant family farming The resulting social configuration was two Chinas one populated by wealthy urban elites transformed into a new silk industry bourgeoisie and the other by peasant families whose women became the workforce for cocoon production The author describes the roles of merchant guilds and other elite organizations established to protect the silk industry from outside competition and excessive taxation the methods and styles of elite networking and investment in building modern silk filatures and the roles of women elite women in sericulture reform and peasant women in silkworm raising She also reveals the cooperation between silk industry elites and Nationalist government officials in the 1920 s and 1930 s which resulted in an industry that was virtually state directed and designed to pass downward to the peasants the costs of building more competitive silk filatures This discovery challenges the prevailing tendency to think in terms of radical ruptures between Nationalist and Communist rule
