historical research cross cultural comparisons and their own study of over 2 000 contemporary women attending high schools and colleges the authors present powerful new evidence to support the existence of a syndrome they call anxious somatic depression Their investigation shows that the first symptoms usually surface in adolescence most often in young women who aspire to excel academically and professionally Many of the affected women grew up feeling that their parents valued sons over daughters They identified intellectually with their successful fathers not with their traditional homemaker mothers Disordered eating is one way of rejecting the feminine bodies they perceive as barriers to achievement and recognition Silverstein and Perlick uncover medical descriptions matching their diagnosis in Hippocratic texts from the fourth century B C in anthropological studies of Africa Asia and Latin America and in case studies of many noted psychologists and psychiatrists including the hysteric patients Freud used to develop his theories on psychoanalysis They have also discovered that statistics on disordered eating depression and a host of other symptoms soared in eras in which women s opportunities grew particularly the 1920s when record numbers of women entered college and the workforce the boyish silhouette of the flapper became the feminine ideal and anorexia became epidemic and again from the 1970s to the present day The authors show that identifying this devastating syndrome is a first step toward its prevention and cure The Cost of Competence presents an urgent message to parents educators policymakers and the medical community on the crucial importance of providing young women with equal opportunity and equal respect
