Remaking The Chinese State Strategies Society And Security:

Remaking the Chinese State Jianmin Zhao, Bruce J. Dickson, 2001 After more than twenty years of economic and political reform China is a vastly different country to that left by Mao Almost all the characteristic policies and practices of the Maoist era have been abandoned with the goals of revolution in foreign and domestic policy being replaced by an emphasis on economic modernization accompanied by radical social transformation and an increasingly significant international role Yet despite these dramatic changes other fundamental features of China's policy remain unchanged This book explores the strategies of reform in China and their implications for its domestic and foreign policies It challenges the misconceptions that no political reforms are taking place and that China is eagerly embracing capitalism It also challenges the view that China does not abide by international norms and practices on military and security matters Its contributors all highly respected scholars avoid simple generalisations about the nature of China's politics or future path instead offering comparisons and contrasts between policy areas and regions to create a more complete picture of this complex country Representing Calcutta Swati Chattopadhyay, 2005 Exploring the politics of representation and the cultural changes that occurred in the city this post colonial study addresses the questions of modernity and space that haunt our perception of Calcutta environmentalists nationalists to dissidents ethnic minorities to Hong Kong residents Wright shows that with the exception of the latter popular protest has achieved adequate government responses to the public's most serious grievances Yet Wright cautions that this may not last forever For Chinese citizens that engage in protest often suffer serious emotional and physical costs As a result they have developed an unhealthy relationship with the regime In this context Xi Jinping's recent efforts to restrict public expression may backfire leading to an explosive dynamic that may threaten the political stability that China's ruling elites so desire

China and International Institutions Marc Lanteigne, 2005-11-14 China has shifted its foreign policy from one that avoided engagement in international organizations to one that is now embracing them These moves present a new challenge to international relations theory How will the global community be affected by the engagement of this massive global power with international institutions This new study explores why China has chosen to abandon its previous doctrine of institutional isolation and details how it is currently unable to balance American power unilaterally and details an indirect path to greater power In addition it includes the first major analysis of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization comprising China Russia and most of Central Asia In contrast to many works on the rise of China question which place an emphasis on her material goods and powers this book delivers a new approach It shows how the unique barriers Beijing is facing are preventing the country from taking the traditional paths of territorial expansion and political economic domination in order to develop as a great power One of these barriers is the United States and its inherent military and economic strength The other is the existence of nuclear weapons which makes direct great power conflict unacceptably costly China has therefore opted for a new path using institutions as stepping stones to great power status This book will be of great interest to students and scholars of international relations world politics world history and Asia
