This Italian favourite has a smallish stature, long walk, and energetic trot, which make it ideal for farm work.

The most popular heavy breed in Italy is the Italian Heavy Draught horse, sometimes called the Italian Agricultural horse. It is found throughout southern and central Italy, but chiefly around Rome.

In development dates from a time when Italian farmers required a quick-moving horse of smaller proportions to carry out general light agricultural work. To improve the rather poor local stock, breeders imported the massive and energetic Flemish (see p.76) from Belgium. The resulting cross produced powerful offspring, but they were also too heavy and too slow. A more successful cross was with the French, especially the lighter, quick-moving Breton type (see p.68). This was successful for its work-moving action, which came via its connection with the Normandy Trotter (see p.137). When crossed with Italian stock, the progeny was compact and relatively fast-moving, powerful animals with kind, docile temperaments; they were handy and also economical to keep. Their speed, most appreciated by Italian farmers, accounts for the Italian name for this breed, Fino (Finesse Rapid), which means quick heavy draught.

There is some variation in the appearance of the Italian Heavy Draught, the legacy of the fine half-blood Italian mare. In particular the limbs can be good. They often lack knee, the joints are stiff and rounded, and the pasterns are upright, while the feet are heavy. The overall constitution shows the benefits of the French influence and the head is surprisingly fine for a heavy breed. There is also more than a suggestion of the smaller and lighter English type (see p.76), which, as a cross-breed, may well have been limited in the otherwise monolithic heavy stock. Today the Italian Heavy Draught is bred for its use as well as for working purposes.

THE ITALIAN HEAVY DRAUGHT HAS A STRONG FOLLOWING IN ITALY. IN 2010, REGISTERED HORSES EXCEEDED 6,500.

SYMBOL OF VERONA

The heavy head of the Italian Heavy Draught has the long snout under a mask. This is unique to the breed, and the shape of the head, with its long snout and mask, is the symbol of Verona. The coat of arms of Verona, which is a shield with a ladder and the letters 'FE' on either side, is a symbol of the city. The Italian Heavy Draught is a symbol of the city of Verona, and its head is a symbol of the city.
