

Thermal Physics Notes

THERMAL PHYSICS:

The branch of physics that study the temperature, heat energy and their relation to the matter.

Temperature:

It is the degree of hotness of an object, and it can be measured by thermometer. Temperature can be express by Celsius ($^{\circ}\text{C}$), Fahrenheit ($^{\circ}\text{F}$) or K scale.

Heat:

It is the energy which travels from high temperature to low temperature in a matter. It is also called thermal or internal energy. It is measured in joules (J)

Simple Kinetic Molecular Model of Matter

- Matter can exist in one of three different states:

Solid	Liquid	Gas
Fixed shape and volume	Fixed volume but changes shape depending on its container	No fixed shape or volume, gases fill up containers
Strong forces of attraction between particles- particles close to each other.	Weaker attractive forces than solids- medium distances between particles	Almost no intermolecular forces- large distances between particles
Fixed pattern (lattice)	No fixed pattern, liquids take shape of their container	Particles far apart, and move quickly
Atoms vibrate but can't change position $\therefore$ fixed volume and shape	Particles slide past each other.	Collide with each other and bounce in all directions
