The Consonants of the (western) Cretan Dialect A Phonetic and Phonological Analysis

The Cretan dialect, one of the most distinct regional Greek dialects, has been examined by a very limited number of studies. Research concerned with the phonetics and phonology of the dialect is even more scarce and mainly impressionistic. The aim of this project is to provide, using acoustic analysis techniques, a phonetic and phonological description of the consonants that occur in the dialectal variety spoken in western Crete.

Project objectives

- Record dialectal materials in conversational and read speech containing consonants in a variety of contexts.
- Describe the phonemic inventory of consonants and their allophones.
- List phonological phenomena that provide valuable information on phonological processes absent in Standard Modern Greek, such as extreme palatalization and (affrication of velar consonants and delateralization and retroflexion of /r/ before back vowels).
- Document the dialect of Crete and assist its rescuing since it is an undeniable fact that some phonetic and phonological features that characterise the dialect are mainly retained by older speakers in the villages of Crete.
- Disseminate our results in both academic and non-academic audiences with the goal of showing the richness of spoken Greek.
- Provide a baseline for further research on the phonetics and phonology of the Cretan dialect (e.g. examination of eastern Cretan dialect, examination of vowels and intonation).
