The Bhagavad-Gita William Q. Judge,Robert Crosbie,Raghavan Iyer,H. P. Blavatsky,2017-03-10 Lord Krishna strings the sacred teachings of the Bhagavad G t on the golden thread of mental posture the relation between the spiritual seeker and Divine Wisdom embodied as the Light of the Logos in lustrous beings Mental posture refers primarily to an attitude of mind and constitutes the sacred trust between chela and guru Those who wish to become sincere and true servants of all humanity with its immense suffering and of the Great Masters of Wisdom with their inexhaustible light must prepare themselves by a process of purgation whereby they negate the false conceptions of themselves derived from the world into which they are born through their heredity upbringing environment and education This is done by a method of intense self questioning Upanishadic Platonic thought is essentially a dialogue with oneself When people really begin to ask questions of themselves and also attempt to apply the principles evolved in formulating questions in a multiplicity of contexts then they gradually begin to glimpse the dynamic albeit mysterious relation between the manifest and the unmanifest The constant underlying theme of all these essays is the crucial need for unconditional devotion to Universal Good as a prerequisite for traveling on the spiritual Path There is simply nothing else that can serve as a substitute for the highest of noble motives for living the spiritual life But these writings also bear upon the crucial and thorny problem of translating theoria into praxis and they shed a pristine light upon the obstacles
