

NICK FALDO

FALDO'S FIXES

Most amateur and high handicap golfers set out on a round of golf knowing that they have serious faults with one or more areas of the game. They hope they won't surface during the round, but they inevitably do. If only there was some sort of visual reference to consult before they began, they might be able to keep these ailments in check. Well, now there is...

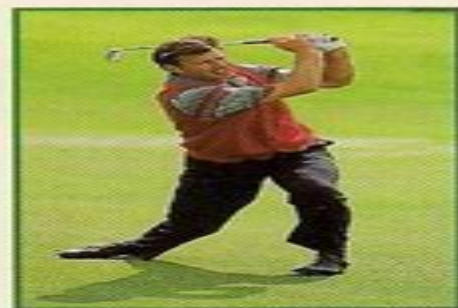

In this video I look at the most common faults known to golfers and set about curing them. I begin with the all embracing faults, ones that can damage almost every aspect of the game, like shanking, hooking and slicing.

Take slicing. There isn't necessarily one quick fix for slicing. If only it was as simple as that. Instead I look at several common reasons for a slice. In pinpointing them, I then show the best ways to try to avoid slicing - altering the grip, or the stance, or perhaps something in the takeaway and backswing.
