MY GRANDDAUGHTERS ARE COMBING
OUT THEIR LONG HAIR

my granddaughters are combing out their long hair sitting at night on the rocks in Venezuela they have watched their babes falling like white birds from the last of the treetop cradles they have buried them in their hearts where they will never forget to keep on singing them the old songs.

brought down to earth they use twigs, flint scrapers;
acadian their laughter underground makes the thyme
flower in darkness,

my granddaughters are thin as fishbones & hornfooted, but they are always beautiful under the stars: like little asian paperthings they seem to open outwards into their own waterbowl.

mornings they waken to light's chink ricocheting off an old Black's Harbour sardinecan.

reduce them the last evangelines make them part of the stars.

my granddaughters are coming out at night, combing their burr-colored hair, by the rocks & streamtrickle in Venezuela, they are burnt out as falling stars but they laugh and keep on singing them the old songs.
