Philosophising in Mombasa provides an approach to the anthropological study of philosophical discourses in the Swahili context of Mombasa Kenya In this historically established Muslim environment at the dawn of the twenty first century philosophy is investigated as social discourse and intellectual practice situated in everyday life This is done from the perspective of an anthropology of philosophy a project which is spelled out in the opening chapter Entry points and guidelines for the ethnography are provided by discussions of Swahili literary genres life histories and social debates From here local discourses of knowledge are described and analysed The social environment and discursive dynamics of the Old Town are portrayed firstly by means of following and contextualising informal discussions among neighbours and friends at daily meeting points in the streets and secondly by presenting and discussing in depth case studies of local intellectuals and their contributions to moral and intellectual debates within the community Taking recurrent internal discussions on social affairs politics and appropriate Islamic conduct as a focus this study sheds light on local practices of critique and reflection In particular three local intellectuals two poets one Islamic scholar are portrayed against the background of regional intellectual history Islamic scholarship as well as common public debates and private discussions The three contextual portrayals discuss exemplary issues for the wider field of research on philosophical discourse in Mombasa and the Swahili context on the whole with reference to the lives and projects of distinct individual thinkers Ultimately the study directs attention beyond the regional and the African contexts towards the anthropological study of knowledge and intellectual practice around the world Horn and Crescent Randall L.
