

Capítulo I

Los mercados turísticos en el Mundo. Los cambios en las últimas décadas

Características del turismo

- Un mercado es un lugar, físico o no, en que la oferta y la demanda de un bien o un servicio se ponen en contacto y se produce una transacción a un precio determinado que denominamos precio de equilibrio. El turismo también tiene este comportamiento, aunque su heterogeneidad hace que el mercado tenga una actuación compleja.
- El turismo es un servicio subjetivo, que se produce y consume en un solo acto, heterogéneo en su composición, cuyas partes componentes son sustituibles, de un solo uso, de oferta rígida a corto plazo, estacional e invisible.
- Según el origen y destino del viaje se establecen tres formas de turismo:
 - Turismo Interno: Residentes dentro de su país.
 - Turismo Receptor: No residente dentro a un país que no es el de origen.
 - Turismo Emisor: Residentes de un país que viajan a otro.
- * Desde el punto de vista estadístico, se pueden distinguir además las siguientes categorías:
 - Turismo Nacional: Turismo interno y turismo emisor (Recogiendo los dos posibles destinos de los residentes)
 - Turismo Internacional: Turismo emisor y turismo receptor.
 - Turismo Interior: Turismo interno y turismo receptor (Recogiendo los dos tipos de turistas que puede haber en un país)
- ◆ Países con importancia en algunas categorías anteriores:
- ◆ Países emisores: Japón y Alemania
- ◆ Países Receptores: España, Italia y Grecia.
- ◆ Países con importancia en ambos anteriores: Gran Bretaña y Francia.
- ◆ Países con importancia en todos los tipos de turismo: EE.UU

Importancia del turismo en la economía

- El turismo es una actividad económica compleja compuesta por varios elementos provenientes de distintos subsectores de la economía de un país. Su importancia relativa varía de un país a otro.
- El turismo se considera como una exportación (de servicios) del país receptor, en el que genera renta, favorece la creación de empleo, aporta divisas que ayudan a equilibrar la balanza de pagos, favorece el incremento de los ingresos del Estado y fomenta la actividad empresarial en general.
- El efecto arrastre o multiplicador del turismo hace que para muchos países en vía de desarrollo el turismo es una actividad económica fundamental para salir de la pobreza.
- Los países receptores obtienen importantes beneficios de la actividad turística, pero también se producen efectos negativos sobre los recursos naturales, la población
