194X Andrew Michael Shanken, 2009 During the Second World War American architecture was in a state of crisis The rationing of building materials and restrictions on nonmilitary construction continued the privations that the profession had endured during the Great Depression At the same time the dramatic events of the 1930s and 1940s led many architects to believe that their profession and society itself would undergo a profound shift once the war ended with private commissions giving way to centrally planned projects The magazine Architectural Forum coined the term 194X to encapsulate this wartime vision of postwar architecture and urbanism In a major study of American architecture during World War II Andrew M Shanken focuses on the culture of anticipation that arose in this period as out of work architects turned their energies from the built to the unbuilt redefining themselves as planners and creating original designs to excite the public about postwar architecture Shanken recasts the wartime era as a crucible for the intermingling of modernist architecture and consumer culture Challenging the pervasive idea that corporate capitalism corrupted the idealism of modernist architecture in the postwar era 194X shows instead that architecture's wartime partnership with corporate America was founded on shared anxieties and ideals Business and architecture were brought together in innovative ways as shown by Shanken's persuasive reading of magazine advertisements for Revere Copper and Brass U S Gypsum General Electric and other companies that prominently featured the work of leading progressive architects including Louis I Kahn Eero Saarinen and Walter Gropius Although the unexpected prosperity of the postwar era made the architecture of 194X obsolete before it could be built and led to its exclusion from the story of twentieth century American architecture Shanken makes clear that its anticipatory rhetoric and designs played a crucial role in the widespread acceptance
