Writing Indian Nations Maureen Konkle, 2005-11-16 In the early years of the republic the United States government negotiated with Indian nations because it could not afford protracted wars politically militarily or economically Maureen Konkle argues that by depending on treaties which rest on the equal standing of all signatories Europeans in North America institutionalized a paradox the very documents through which they sought to dispossess Native peoples in fact conceded Native autonomy As the United States used coerced treaties to remove Native peoples from their lands a group of Cherokee Pequot Ojibwe

Tuscarora and Seneca writers spoke out. With history polemic and personal narrative these writers countered widespread misrepresentations about Native peoples supposedly primitive nature their inherent inability to form governments and their impending disappearance. Furthermore they contended that arguments about racial difference merely justified oppression and dispossession deriding these arguments as willful attempts to evade the true meanings and implications of the treaties the writers insisted on recognition of Native peoples political autonomy and human equality. Konkle demonstrates that these struggles over the meaning of U S Native treaties in the early nineteenth century led to the emergence of the first substantial body of Native writing in English and as she shows the effects of the struggle over the political status of Native peoples remain embedded in contemporary scholarship. Newsletter, 2002

Postcolonial Literature and the United States: Race, Ethnicity, and Literature, Probing essays that examine critical issues surrounding the United States's ever expanding international cultural identity in the postcolonial era. Download Plain Text version. At the beginning of the twenty first century we may be in a transnational moment increasingly aware of the ways in which local and national narratives in literature and elsewhere cannot be conceived apart from a radically new sense of shared human histories and global interdependence. To think transnationally about literature history and culture requires a study of the evolution of hybrid identities within nation states and diasporic identities across national boundaries. Studies addressing issues of race ethnicity and empire in U S culture have provided some of the most innovative and controversial contributions to recent scholarship. Postcolonial Theory and the United States: Race Ethnicity and Literature represents a new chapter in the emerging dialogues about the importance of borders on a global scale. This book collects nineteen essays written in the 1990s in this emergent field by both well established and up and coming scholars. Almost all the essays have been either especially written for this volume or revised for inclusion here. These essays are accessible well focused resources for college and university students and their teachers displaying both historical depth and theoretical finesse as they attempt close and lively readings. The anthology includes more than one discussion of each literary tradition associated with major racial or ethnic communities. Such a gathering of diverse complementary and often competing viewpoints provides a good introduction to the cultural differences and commonalities that comprise the United States today. The volume opens with two essays by the editors first a survey of the ideas in the individual pieces and second a long essay that places current debates in U S ethnicity and race studies within both the history of American studies as a whole and recent developments in postcolonial theory. Amritjit Singh a professor of English and African American studies at Rhode Island College is coeditor of Conversations with Ralph Ellison and Conversations with Ishmael Reed both from University Press of Mississippi. Peter Schmidt a professor of English at Swarthmore College is the author of The Heart of the Story: Eudora Welty's Short Fiction. University Press of Mississippi American Indian Quarterly, 1993
